AFTER THOUGHTS

By GEORGE

This time last year we were all wondering just how high the water was to raise, but this year we are wondering how soon we are going to have winter weather. Not that we are kicking about it, just wondering.

It looks that something put the skids under the tobacco market. We would like to know just what these comes about every once in awhile. Can anyone tell us.

The distillers tell us that price of Bottled In Bond whiskey is to drop some thirty percent. Now maybe some of us will have change to buy chasers.

Don't forget to attend the basketball game between the Panthers (P.-T. A.) and the Rockets (Faculty) at New Haven, Saturday night. There will also be two other games. Come out and help the P.-T. A. and enjoy yourself too. We'll see you there.

Remember to attend, or at least buy a ticket to the President's Birthday Ball, to be given all over the county for funds to combat infantile paralysis. The date for these affairs is January 29th.

Here is your history lesson for this week, with the names of prominent men born during the week: Jan. 16, 1885, Capt. C. D. Sigby; Jan. 17, 1706, Benjamin Franklin; in 1863, Lloyd George, English statesman; Jan. 18, 1772, Daniel Webster, statesman; Jan. 19, 1807, Gen. Robert E. Lee; Jan. 20, 1877, Josef Hoffman, musician; Jan. 21, 1894, Gen. Stonewall Jackson; Jan. 22, 1786, Lord Byron, poet. How many are you familiar with.

We learn this week that Mrs. Alfred Stephens will have her restaurant-opening some time in the near future. Maybe the last of this week.

Looking up and down Main street after dark a person would think the town was on fire, from a distance. It's not just the neon signs of the various business houses. The most recent to hang on is the Hotel Waltonian. This is the new name for the Atlas Hotel.

We were noting around the new theatre building Sunday and was surprised to see how well it was progressing. When Jas. E. Falls gets it completed he is going to have something there.

The city of Louisville, is to observe Gratitude Day, Monday, Jan. 24th. We think that this is a very nice gesture on their part. Louisville was hit very hard during the 1937 flood.

Teacher—What was it that Sir Walter Raleigh said when he placed his coat on the muddy road for Queen Elizabeth to walk on? Modern Student—Step on it, kid. And with this little bit of humor we are going to say so long until next week.

Erlanger Man Fatally Injured

Sunday When Struck By Car Driven By Minister

Injuries received when struck by an automobile on the Dixie Highway, near Florence, Sunday, resulted in the death of John Tucker, 72 farmer, Goodrich Drive, Erlanger at St. Elizabeth Hospital, early Tuesday.

It was reported that the aged farmer was struck by an automobile driven by Rev. James Irby, pastor of the Christian Church, Florence. He told officials that the man was walking along the highway and suddenly stepped into the path of his automobile.

The victim was taken to his home following the accident, and when his condition became grave, Monday, he was moved to the hospital. The body was taken to the funeral home of Philip Taliaferro, Erlanger, where arrangements for the funeral are being completed.

The Popular Election of County School Superintendent

For eighteen years Kentucky has selected its Superintendents of Schools by Boards of Education. This year, as usual, the perennial bill for the popular election of Superintendents turns up in the legislature. School people were warned in advance by some of the politicians that this bill would be introduced. This, of course, was a threat held over the heads of school people to compel them to be submissive to other features of the legislative program. This measure has always been used for this or some similar purpose.

It is true that the practice in some counties is disgraceful, and that they do play politics, and that the people evidently want that sort of thing, but if the county superintendent is required to join in with other candidates, and make two races for the office then all the county schools will be in politics instead of a few.

A candidate who seeks votes necessarily is obligated to his supporters. In order to secure his election he will have to become part of a slate. He will also have offers from commercial concerns and private individuals to assist him in financing his campaign. All these circumstances restrict his free professional movements and render him less competent as a school administrator.

This procedure changes a professional position to a political one, and therefore requires much time for the political end of it that should be given to professional duties. The popular election method requires an appeal to politics to obtain the job, and it requires too much attention to politics to hold it.

But only the vote-getter will be elected and it is highly possible that the ability to get votes is not commensurate with the ability to administer efficiently a school system. Of course, the "court-house-ring" can add another block of patronage by annexing the county superintendent to the list of politically elected officers. The state fund of more than nine million dollars is a tidy sum to dump into the lap of political manipulators.

The people of Kentucky who want their children trained in public schools do not want politicians to direct their schools and they do not want the enactment of legislation to that end.

NO CHANGE

In 1938 Rate of Contribution For Old-Age Insurance

There is no change in the 1938 rate of contribution for old-age insurance, it was announced recently by Frank B. Decker, Jr., acting manager of the Covington, Ky. field office of the Social Security Board.

"This year and next the employee and employer continue to contribute one percent each for old-age insurance," Mr. Decker said.

"One percent is deducted from the wages of all persons who are employed in occupations covered by the Social Security Act. A like amount is added by the employer to the combined contributions buried to the United States collector of internal revenue each quarter, instead of monthly as heretofore."

"Contributions for the first three months of 1938 are due not later than April 30 under this arrangement," Mr. Decker added.

He said the Social Security Act provides for an increase in employee-contributions to 1½ percent starting January 1, 1940.

Contribution rates under the various unemployment compensation laws reach their maximum this year, Mr. Decker reported.

In Region V, which is the Social Security unit under which the Covington, Kentucky office is located, are three states, Ohio, Michigan and Kentucky.

The unemployment compensation laws of those states provide the following state contribution rates for 1938: Michigan, employers 3 percent; Ohio, employers 2.7 percent; Kentucky, employers 2.7 percent, employees 1 percent.

In all three states a contribution of three-tenths of one percent of the payroll is payable to the United States Collector of Internal Revenue.

P.-T. A. vs FACULTY

Basketball Galore at New Haven Gym Saturday Night, Jan. 22nd

"Born thirty years too soon" was the expression of spectators at the final practice session of the New Haven P.-T. A. and Faculty basketball teams prior to the games called for this Saturday night.

In the Women's faculty team, also, Dickerson is running off with the honors for getting the team "no where fast," while Mattie Uza, Corine McCormack and Rebecca Elset were knocked down, one, two, three by O. P. Presser when she sprinted for 20 ft. Edith Hedges, yell for the "cancer team," kept her rooters in a heated state of mind when she called for a zes-boom rah only to have them answer with something resembling the "call of the wild." Collins and Caldwell are counted on to bring in the victory as they are the dark mares of the Rockets. In the mothers team, Flash Newman and Puny Rivard are the bulwarks they, at all times, can be expected to venture where others fear to tread.

Not much attention has been given to the Men's games and the little dears have sukked and pouted about this neglect that we promised to put their names in print. Little Cecil Presser and Bull Dog Gensind—wink think they are the best on the floor. Old Uncle George Coe bless his little heart, tries so hard but he should be in shape by Saturday night. Cousin John Garrison tried out for the team but his speed was not up with the rest of the boys. Buster Fibbs and Aunt Ida Clements are in demand constantly as they sweep and drive down the floor, each with their own individual basketball, which Coach Brock presented to them for the sake of peace and quiet—Reporter.

On Friday night of this week, Jan. 21st, the Bearcats play Beechwood at the Walton gym, and on Tuesday night, Jan. 25th, they will be hosts to the Newport Wildcats. These should be good games, so be sure to come out and help the Bearcats crack a couple of tough ones.

FARMERS TO MEET HERE

HARDWOOD HIGHLIGHTS

By MAOL-CHOLM

BEARCATS BOW TO ERLANGER BUT WALLOP WARSAW

The Bearcats had but two games this past week and in these they broke even, losing to Lloyd of Erlanger, and winning from Warsaw.

Last Friday night, the Cats went to Erlanger, where they "look on" the Lloyd juggernaut. In the first quarter the teams played on about even terms, but the Juggernaut gained momentum as the game progressed, and at the end of the contest had the locals "snowed under," 36 to 19. Miles was high scorer for the winners with 12 points, and Chapman was best for Walton with 8. The Walton Cubs won the "lid lifter" 13 to 11.

The Bearcats went to Warsaw, on Tuesday night, and played the Gallatin County boys in their new gym. During the first half it was a close game, with Walton holding a 12 to 8 edge at the intermission. In the last half the Cats found the range and had piled up a 35 to 18 advantage as the game ended. Osborn again led the Walton offense by bagging 22 points. In the preliminary, Walton's Cubs continued to win, downing their opponents, 23 to 15.

On Friday night of this week, Jan. 21st, the Bearcats play Beechwood at the Walton gym, and on Tuesday night, Jan. 25th, they will be hosts to the Newport Wildcats. These should be good games, so be sure to come out and help the Bearcats crack a couple of tough ones.

BACKED BY Over 80 Years of Experience and Integrity

The manufacture of a fine pair of glasses is an art as well as a science. It goes beyond appearance, materials, instrumental inspection. There must also be incorporated the unseen quality due to practiced skill and judgement on long experience.

It is in this that Motch's glasses are far superior. Back of every pair of glasses stand the 80 years of experience and integrity of Motch's Jewelry Store.

ON THE SMELL OF BOOKS

Much has been made of the contents of books, but I cannot recall having ever seen any discussion of their odor. Emerson says something about the odor of good deeds. This is rather far-fetched as a figure of speech, but the smell of books, a sort of distinctive one for every book, is a matter of common experience. You practical-minded ones will hasten to tell me that this odor arises from the kind of ink used, the paper itself, or the musty places where the books have been stored. I suppose you are right, but I just must believe that some of the odor comes from the contents of the book itself. If there is an odor of sanctity, why not an odor of literature, or religion, or even politics (God save the mark)?

Our old family Bible had an odor all its own. When I used to look at its pictures, which I thought to be photographs, I noticed the odor and unconsciously associated it with some of the rather lurid pictures of Hell. Even today, when I accidentally encounter a book with a smell like that, I find myself reviewing such scenes as Abraham's sacrifice of Isaac, Adam and Eve's flight from Eden, with a very kind-faced angel in pursuit, or of the Last Judgment. This last picture is especially vivid. A rather wily old fellow is inviting a group of people wading a river to come into his den from cookery, is issuing. Especially did I associate the smell of that smoke picture with the smell of that smoke. Many times since childhood I have smelled burning flesh, horseflesh, chiefly, and it has always reminded me of that old half-tone plate in the family Bible.

One day our teacher brought to the little country schoolhouse a copy of Shakespeare's complete works. My, how that odor mystified us. I heard the teacher say strange words about somebody named Shylock and somebody else called Hamlet, but I remembered the odor of the book better than the names and still associate Hamlet's spectacular career and Shylock's pound of flesh with that old book and its smell.

In the bureau drawer we kept a package of old letters. Letters used to mean so much more than they do now that families rather prided themselves on the number and age of the letters on hand. On sacred occasions some of them were brought out and read, painfully, for the writing with a quill pen was probably none too plain at first, and the years had faded the ink, too. What they were about at our house I cannot remember, but I know that there was a smell about these old letters that many years cannot destroy in memory.

Recently I reread my dog-eared copy of Thoreau's Walden, a copy that I owned when I lived in the country near Fidelity. This experience took me on many an excursion into my boyhood, for the odor that I first detected in the book when it came through the mail is still there. Besides, from numerous trips to the woods with me it had acquired the smell of fallen leaves and ferns and moss and spicewood and numerous flowers that were pressed in it. And a lot of invisible things got mixed up with the little old volume, so that a whiff of its distinctive odor brings back trees, landscapes, hills and streams, and all of my boyhood. You probably would say the book smells musty, and you would probably be right; but you do not have my memories.

Boone County 4-H Club
First Prize Record Book Story

Every year at the Covington District Tobacco Show and Sales prizes are awarded on project record books. These record books are judged for neatness, completeness, accuracy and story. On this basis the record book turned in by Rogers Knox of New Haven Boosters club was awarded first place in the county according to David Colville, Assistant County Agent. Roger's story is as follows:

"My crop of tobacco in 1936 was very good but when 1937 came around I thought I would raise a bigger and better crop."

In early March, while it was still snowing, I broke my land and started making by plant bed. May 14th when the sun began to pour down I disked my ground so as to get it well pulverized for the dry summer we had. I set my tobacco the latter part of May so that it would mature early and not be green.

I cultivated the tobacco after every rain so the ground would not bake and cause the plants to die. I began hoeing the tobacco when the plants had about five or six leaves to the plant.

There were quite a few worms on my tobacco this year and it kept me busy spraying poison so they couldn't spray my crop. When the tobacco became chest high and bloomed out, I topped it so it wouldn't burn up, near the bottom. After topping I didn't wait for any suckers I cut it and hauled it to the barn (August 27th). Because of the hot weather, I didn't wait it to burn. My tobacco cured up very fast because of the warm dry weather we were having.

In the middle of October, I had the tobacco put in a bulk. A few days later I had it stripped, bulked down and pressed out. On Friday, December 17th, I have to take my tobacco to Covington and on Saturday, I hope tobacco is bringing a good price because mine goes on sale then and I am hoping for a good price.

Marijuana's Origin

Marijuana's origin goes back to 1890 when sheik-dominated tribes in the Orient were introduced to the drug. Sheiks subjected tribesmen to the drug. Finding pleasure in it, they became more subjugated because they wished the opiate and could get it only from the sheiks. Known in the East as hashish, the drug gave its name to a cult or tribe known as Hashishans. Its members were murderous under the influence of the drug and from the name of the cult comes the modern word "assassin." On this continent the plant has the scientific name of cannabis sativa. Commonly the drug is known as "loco weed," "muggies" or "reefer." Used most commonly in cigarette form, it produces a feeling of acceleration and results in high states of irritation. Destroying brain tissue, it leads to insanity.

Old Autographs in Cave

Practically all of the exploring of Mammoth cave, Kentucky, before the Civil war was done by the use of reed torches and homemade talow candles. In those days it was a practice of the visitors who were taking routes through the cave to tie their candles on walking canes and smoke their names on the walls and ceiling of the cave. At one place in the cave this practice was carried on so extensively that it has been named Register hall. Here many of the dates are a century and a quarter old.

KENTUCKY THE LONG AGO

IX—Fleets of Flatboats

Float Down the Rivers

The most important pioneer route into the great West, is known to history as The River Route.

In the beginning England claimed the eastern part of this continent even beyond Hudson Bay. Spain controlled the Mississippi at its mouth and both England and France claimed the Mississippi Basin, England through the discovery of Cabot, France through the exploration of LaSalle.

The thirteen colonies were hemmed in between the Atlantic Ocean and the Alleghany mountains. Beyond that mountain wall was a Mystery Land, the condition and extent of which no mortal mind conceived. Both nations were alert and a way to possess it.

The beautiful Ohio River was the alluring avenue provided by Nature to open up this country. No river history has had a greater human interest. Flowing to the westward, it pursued its way in spite of obstacles, and like a siren, beckoned men of all sorts and conditions to follow its course.

Painted savages in undisturbed possession had crept silently through the dark forests that fringed it and climbing into their birch canoes, had crossed it and paddled up its numerous tributaries into the heart of Kentucky, which was their Happy Hunting Ground.

They went into raptures over its beauty and each nation had a name for it which meant "beautiful."

The Wyandots called it Ohezu. The Mohawks called it Oheyo. The Oneidas called it Ohe.

The Iroquois called it Oyo. The first white men who followed the Indians in order to barter gaudy calicoes, whistles, jews-harps, comb-knives and looking glasses for their discarded pelts, were French fur traders and they also expressed their admiration for its beauty by calling it La Belle Riviere.

The English anglicized the Indian names and called it the OHIO.

France and England struggled for a century to get control of the Ohio Country and the fur trade.

After the Treaty of Alsia-Chapelle, a royal grant of 500,000 acres of land on both sides of the Ohio was made to the Ohio Land Company on condition that 100 families would settle on it within seven years. Christopher Gist was sent to select the lands and England made her plans to occupy the disputed territory.

France as a counter move, sent Celeron de Bienville, from Canada, to strengthen her claim to the territory, with a captain, eight subaltern officers, six aides, an armorer, a chaplain, one-hundred and eighty Canadians and thirty Indians. The expedition set out from Montreal in twenty-three canoes, bearing a strange mysterious chest. They paddled up the St. Lawrence through Lake Erie, and by portage reached the Ohio down which they floated. Stopping, where a certain river flowed into it, Celeron with great pomp and ceremony, removed

Yellow Curls

By KARIN C. BUNDOLF
McClure Newspaper Syndicate.
WNU Service.

AT LAST Mary Ladd's long-hoped-for day had come. Before her was a letter from the matron of the Sheltering Arms home.

She had just the sort of little girl that Mrs. Gray had been looking for, a tot three with yellow curls that shone like gold in the sunlight and a disposition like a May morning.

Mary Ladd went about her duties with a song on her lips. She had waited so long that it seemed as though she could not endure the brief wait until noon when Jim would come to drive her to the home.

Thirteen years it was now since she had held a soft, warm little body to her heart. Now she had nothing left but two little cold white crosses in Mr. Auburn, and memories still poignant to the influence of other mothers' happiness.

She went down stairs to prepare a light lunch. Jim would be so glad, and just as excited as she was. He had been such an adored and adorable daddy.

He came home at noon, just as the clock struck—a tall, lean and slightly stooping man whose hair was fast turning gray at the temples. When he read the letter the tiny crinkles that always appeared about his mouth and the corners of his eyes, when he was pleased about anything, satisfied Mary that it was quite what content that it was to be a girl, after all.

"Let's not wait for lunch," said he. "Why not go now and take the baby back home for lunch? A cup of tea will do me until we get back."

He drank his tea while Mary got ready. They drove off.

"It's nearly dinner time," the matron told them, as she welcomed them in, "but I will take you up to where the children are. Perhaps you would like to see them all together."

So she led the way up the broad, polished floor to a great room on the second floor, a room of sunshine and flowers, of dried wild flowers and potted plants, of dolls and colored paper butterflies in the windows. Two teachers were busy with the children. It was not hard to pick out Baby Ruth from the rest for her long yellow curls gleamed in the sunlight of the big room.

"This is your new mother, dear," said the matron, laying her hand on the child's head for an instant, "and this is your daddy. Say how do you do."

"How do you do?" returned the child obediently, dropping a little curtsey.

"We teach them all that," explained the matron. "You won't have any trouble at all with her. She is a likable child, and both her parents are dead."

Ruth crept like a shy bird into her new daddy's arms; but Mary's attention had been diverted to a tiny crib at her side, where lay an infant whose eyes reminded her of the eyes of the four motherless dolls at home, fixed and staring and blue. The baby face was pinched and waxlike. Mary leaned over the crib. The blue eyes stared back into her own with such intensity that she gathered the little creature into her arms.

"I don't know what to do with that mite," said the matron, almost apologetically. "We don't generally keep our children long. We like to put them into foster homes. But nobody wants this one. He was abandoned four months ago, when he was about a week old. He is healthy enough, has had all the tests, but he just doesn't thrive. I had him put in here this morning because it was so sunny."

"Poor little man," breathed Mary, her lips brushing his cheek. "Poor little man that nobody wants. The baby's skinny, blue-veined hands fluttered to Mary's cheek, and something like a smile passed over his face. Mary held him closer.

"I want him," she announced. "I want him quite as much as I want the little girl. I can make a man of him."

"It's a lot of work," protested her husband; "more work than you have been used to for some time."

"Neither the work," she cried hotly. "Why, Jim, just think, nobody wants him, my poor little son! You wanted a boy, Jim. We can have both—our son and our daughter. The little tin soldiers are waiting for him."

"Ruth," she called to the owner of the yellow curls, "come here to mother. Don't you want him for your little brother?"

The yellow curls bobbed an emphatic affirmative against Mary's knee.

Daddy Ladd twined a curl around his finger.

"All right," he said, "if Ruth wants a brother, she shall have him."

"The tin soldiers need a general, and Ruth needs somebody to pull those yellow curls."

C. A. WICKLUND, County Agent

The Annual Meeting of the Kenton County Farm Bureau will be held at the Independence Court House, Independence, Ky., on Monday, January 24, 1936, according to announcement made by H. Haden Ware, secretary.

The meeting will be called to order at 10:00 a. m., Eastern Standard time, by John P. Schumacher, president of the organization.

Officers and directors for the coming year will be elected.

Speakers are scheduled for the forenoon, at 11:00 a. m. Exposed Tobacco Stalks Lose Much Fertilizer Value.

Tobacco stalks thrown out into the weather when stripping is done lose much of their fertilizer value since the nitrogen and potash in them are partly soluble in water.

The Kentucky College of Agriculture says that a ton of stalks from Burley tobacco contains about 60 pounds of nitrogen and 65 pounds of potash, and a ton of stalks from dark tobacco about 70 pounds of nitrogen and 48 pounds of potash.

At 15 cents a pound for nitrogen and 5 cents a pound for potash, a ton of Burley stalks is worth $12.25 and a ton of dark tobacco stalks $14.50, when used as fertilizer.

If stalks cannot be kept inside, they should be scattered on the land as soon as possible after stripping. If they can be sheltered from the rain, it is better to hold them until early spring. It is not advisable to use stalks, stems or leaf as a fertilizer for tobacco because of the danger of transmitting disease.

CHAPTER VI—Margaret, resting in the railway station, broods over the situation cast by the head nurse on her supposed benefactor, and finds a splendid job, addressing the head nurse on the three nights in the station. Going to the post office she sends a letter from home, full of sympathy about her, and asking her for a contribution of twenty dollars to the payment on the mortgage. She writes to her mother, and then to her sister, while Margaret, with a sudden thought of her mother, sends a letter to her, as having a poor claim, and takes his leave of the city party.

CHAPTER VII—Greg's friend Rhoderick Steele arrives and sends three days in town. Knows down friends Grandmother's address, and Greg, showing his mother's letters all the news of the mortgage from a neighbor. In the morning, he drives to Rodman street and Margaret leaves with her baggage. She had found the twenty-five dollars, and sent it home. He takes her to the hospital to prove the reality of the mortgage's salary in advance, gets her settled in her room, charges her with furnishing the office. Soon she starts to work, sending out letters to Greg. Alice calls and leaves an affectionate note for Greg, saying that she is in trouble. Greg phones her and turns her to Margaret, saying that he has no money to pay anybody's gambling debts.

About half-past two she whirled on her heel and went to the desk, sitting down and taking a sheet of paper out of the drawer. She wrote rapidly for a minute, and then, taking the pen down on the blotter, took an abrupt leave.

Margaret had been working steadily all the morning and evening since her arrival. She had not stopped for lunch. Mr. Sterling might blame her if she left her alone. So Margaret stayed.

When the lady at last took her leave, and she heard her car start away from the house, she sat back in her chair and drew a sigh of relief. Then she got up and went into the office. There she found the paper the lady had written and without intending to read it her eyes took at a glance the few words it contained.

"Darling Greg: "Come for a cozy little dinner to-night at 8 o'clock. I need you. Am in a awful trouble!"

"Love, ALICE." Margaret went to the window and stood looking out with troubled eyes for a minute trying to think what was her duty. Then she came back, folded the paper and slipped it inside an envelope, laying the envelope on the blotter where Greg would not fail to find it. Now she need not know that she had seen it.

Presently Mrs. Harris came in. "Well, is she gone at last?" She peered cautiously into the other room and finding it empty stepped through and went and looked out the window. Margaret was glad she had put the note decently into an envelope.

"Yes, she's gone," she said, trying to make her tone casual. She would protect her employer as far as she could.

"Do you know who she is?" Mrs. Harris came back to the inner room. "No," said Margaret, still brightly casual. "I think somebody perhaps came for advice. Maybe somebody in trouble. She seemed awfully restless."

"Oh," said Mrs. Harris, considering that view, "you don't think then that she's any of your friends—or relatives?"

"I shouldn't suppose so," said Margaret, "she doesn't look like his kind."

"Well, I should hope not," said the little old lady setting her lips firmly. "I certainly never had a woman like that in my house! She didn't really look respectable."

"People do dress that way nowadays," said Margaret thoughtfully. "A great many people do."

"Not nice people," said Mrs. Harris. "My! I can't see how they can bear themselves! I think they look just grotesque, don't you? You don't wear paint!"

"No, I don't care for it," said Margaret, "I don't see her car?"

"Why, no! I didn't happen to go to the window. Did she have a nice car?"

"Nice! Well, it wasn't ladylike. It was painted white with a red stripe around it, and it was one of those queer low kind of cars that sporting men drive. I really felt kind of ashamed to have a woman like that coming out of my house and driving away in a car like that. Did she say she was coming again?"

"She didn't say," said Margaret. "She asked when Mr. Sterling was coming back and I told her I didn't know."

"H'm!" said Mrs. Harris. "Well, I'm glad she's gone! Poor thing, you look all beat out!"

Greg came in about four o'clock. Margaret told him about the caller, gave him the note, and he looked annoyed.

He applied himself to the telephone and Margaret vanished into the office for today, to make her realize that the mail guard herself. Her life was such a lonely one that she would be greatly in danger of getting too much interested in a man who had been so kind to her as Sterling had been. She must look out for herself. He was a very attractive fellow, but didn't seem to be aware of it either. So many were.

CHAPTER VIII

So Margaret worked demurely through Saturday, shepherded her thoughts on Sunday, and went back again to her work Monday morning quite rested and refreshed.

Greg breezed in near noon. He sat at his desk a few minutes and read his mail, dictated a letter or two in his brief direct style, asked a few questions about some books he had ordered that hadn't arrived, then picked up his hat and overcoat to go out again, and Margaret went back to her typewriter.

"By the way," he said, stopping to her doorway. "I've got to be away for a few days this week. I'm going up to Vermont on business. I don't know how long it will be, but I'm wondering if you wouldn't like to drive up with me and spend Thanksgiving, or maybe Saturday if I couldn't get through sooner."

There were all those circulars to be got off at once! But I mustn't allow you to do it! But it's just heaven-sent that I go, I know, and oh, you don't know how much I wish it were possible."

Greg blinked at her perplexedly for a minute. He just sure what was Margaret's reason for demurring. Probably she thought it wasn't proper or something. Maybe she still didn't trust him. But if she wanted to go as much as that she was going if he had to upset heaven and earth to bring it about.

"Where is your home town?" he began with a polite air. "Here, I've a road map somewhere in my drawer!"

"Come here and let's see how near I'm going to it," he said, flipping the map out on the desk and purposely avoiding Margaret's eyes. He wasn't at all sure she would come. He might have to look up that home town by himself.

But she came, eagerly, surreptitiously mopping away her tears with a little inadequate handkerchief. Greg took in the situation at a glance and selected a seat at random an inch or so above the spot to which Margaret was pointing.

"It's not so far from Rutland, then, is it?"

"About forty miles away," said Margaret, unsuspecting.

"Well, say, now, that's nice," he said, "because that's where I'm going. I've been looking up the mile age and I figured we could get there in one day, perhaps before dark if we started early enough."

"Oh!" said Margaret, her eyes glowing thoughtfully, wistfully. "And, of course, it wouldn't be much out of your way," she added, gazing down at the map and thinking hard. "You could leave me down in the village at the Pettibon's or the Williamses' for overnight and I could get someone to take me up in the morning. I probably could get a chance to ride up with Sam Fletcher, or if he didn't happen to be down I could easily wait for him. I've been thinking of it for many a time. And it would be such fun to walk in on them! They've been worried about me, I know. But I oughtn't to lose so much time here. And I know I oughtn't to let you bother with having me alone."

"You see, I thought we might combine business and pleasure if you went along, that is, if you don't mind working when you're on a pleasure trip. I thought we could work out the wording of those other circulars and also a few important letters I want written. I haven't had the time to think them out, and I thought if you didn't mind we could get those out of the way and then they would be all ready for you to type when we get back."

"Oh, if it's a business trip that's all right," she said. "I certainly won't have any more hesitation or any compunction if I can be of service. I'll be delighted to go. It's the best surprise I could have."

"All right then, we'll call that settled," he said in a businesslike tone. "How about starting tomorrow morning? Would that be too soon? This is Monday, Thanksgiving is Thursday. We'll get there Tuesday night and I could drop you off on the way to Rutland. I'm not sure whether I could finish up my business in one day or not. I'd have to see when I got there. But I'd probably come for you Friday morning, or maybe not till Saturday. You wouldn't mind if you had a day or so longer at home, would you?"

She smiled delightedly. "No, I certainly wouldn't mind," she said.

"I envy you!" he said, looking at her like a little hungry boy. "You've got folks, and one likes to have folks on Thanksgiving day. A holiday doesn't mean a thing when you haven't anybody to share it with."

"Oh," said Margaret, with a troubled glance, "wouldn't you—couldn't you get through, and come back to spend Thanksgiving with us? I know Grandmother and Grandfather would be delighted to have you, and I'd like so much to have them know you."

"Say! That would be great!" said Greg, grinning delightedly. "But perhaps it would upset them terribly to have a stranger coming unannounced."

The meeting adjourned at 12:30 for a delicious luncheon, prepared by the hostess, Mrs. Cummings, and her co-hostesses, Mrs. Frank Cook and Mrs. Clifford Northcutt. The long dining table was very gay and spring-like, with its bowl of yellow and green flowers, with the big basket of grapes and other fruits on the buffet.

An interesting discussion of poetry, its uses and decoration, was given by Miss Byerly. Much interest was displayed in the talk about electrical appliances for the farm home. Members attending gave their home activities, consisting of dressmaking, millinery, quilting, canning of meat and furniture repainting. Mrs. Rolfe Hume read a paper on Wardrobe care; Mrs. Meier read a paper on A Place for Everything and Everything in its Place. They adjourned for a pleasant time, indulging in games led by Mrs. Van H. Weaver.

THE OLD FOLKS ARE THE WINNERS

In Basketball Games Saturday Night at New Haven

Last Saturday night, at the New Haven Triple Basketball games the worn turned, the basket up-set and practice scores failed when the long shots came home for three victories. No one on last Thursday night would concede more than two goals to the old women's team and as for the old men the fast and alert teachers, it was being snickered that they would give out before the half. It may have been the chers of some five hundred who literally hung from the rafters or just their determination to fight that brought them through. Some critics felt that as a man dresses so shall he act and in this case it would be play basket ball. The tender styles worn by these players bespoke of Aunt Myra at the Circus or Ruffles of Remembrance. One player especially lovely, chose an orange hue for his color scheme, this being carried out with the letters PIE across the shoulders. He carried lilies and three guards during the game.

The New Haven Alumni had been losing some sleep over their game with Hamilton and it was as they should as that Hamilton team gave plenty of trouble and only until the last few seconds of play, was the score unevened in the favor of New Haven.

National Farm Loan Association Meets at Burlington

The annual meeting of the Boone County National Farm Loan Association was held at Burlington, on January 19th, with 44 Federal Land Bank borrowers, 8 Land Bank Commissioner borrowers and 14 non-borrower visitors present.

S. Beverly Davis from the Federal Land Bank was present and delivered a most interesting address. Other talks were made by H. R. Forkner County Farm Agent, C. Lister Hemphill, member of the Executive Committee of The Northern Kentucky Productive Credit Administration, H. G. Hightower, Attorney and Rev. O. M. Huey, both members of the Association. Rev. Huey had the record of distance traveled to the meeting, having traveled 105 miles from his home in Louisville to be present. Rev. Huey always attends the annual meetings of the Association. H. L. Origer also made a short talk in the interest of the Association.

An unusual feature of the meeting was the presence of R. S. Cowan a non-borrower visitor who is past 93 years of age and who is also director of the local bank and takes an active interest in the business affairs of this community.

All the present officers and Directors being reelected, they being E. A. Martin, John H. Grimes, B. E. Aylor, Karl Rouse and Thomas Hensley. A. B. Renaker was re-elected Secretary-Treasurer.

The report of the Secretary-Treasurer revealed that out of 109 Federal Land Bank borrowers with loans amounting to $648,400.00 only 5 were delinquent in the amount of $663.75 and with 129 Commissioner borrowers having 265,700.00 in loans, only 5 were delinquent in the amount of $665.90.

The Association has no farms or its hands and no foreclosures pending. The report showed the Association to be in class I with a surplus of $7,280.32, including the legal reserve.

A reporter from the Cincinnati Times Star was present and took pictures of the officers of the Association to appear in that paper.

Several charter members were present, including E. A. Martin, who has served as a director since organization in 1922 and is now President of the organization.

A. B. Renaker organized the Boone County National Farm Loan Association and has served as its Secretary-Treasurer from the beginning.

During the past year 10 Federal Land Bank borrowers have paid their loans in full in the total amount of $42,500.00 and 6 Commissioner borrowers have liquidated their loans in full in the amount of $11,700.00.

Federal Land Bank borrowers of this association own $32,420.00 worth of stock in the Association which amount would be refunded to them should their loans be paid off at this time.

Very few applications are being made for loans now which show that the financial condition of this county is excellent.

AFTER THOUGHTS

By GEORGE

The American workman earning $13.00 a year, worked 32 days last year to support the various agencies of Government—Federal, State and local. We have been wondering how many days we would have to work for the government, as we don't make near $13.00 a year.

"Bing" Crosby, the crooner of crooners has been appointed the "Crooning Ambassador at Large" for the Golden Gate International Exposition, which begins next year.

The history class will now come to order. Take your seats right over there! No whispering! Here's the lesson—Do you know these men and that they were born on the following days: Jan. 23, 1881, Geo. McManus, cartoonist; Jan. 24, 1832, Joseph H. Choate, ambassador; Jan. 25, 1869, Charles Curtis, former Vice President; Jan. 26, 1871, Edwin Hopkins Adams, author; Jan. 27, 1859, Kaiser Wilhelm II; Jan. 28, 1841, Henry M. Stanley, explorer; Jan. 29, 1843, Wm. McKinley, President.

At this time last year everyone was wondering how high the Ohio river was going to rise. On Jan. 24, 1937 will long be remembered as "Black Sunday" in this part of the Ohio Valley, and on Tuesday, Jan. 26th the river reached its peak at Cincinnati, the high being 80 feet. This flood will long be remembered.

At last the weather has arrived that we have been expecting. The wind ushered in snow, ice and colder weather. We don't like it, but we have to take it in order that we may have spring. So we will just have to take it in stride and get out our flannels again.

A silver tongued orator who knows his facts as well as his words is rare.

Did you know that motorists are getting seven times as much wear out of tires now, as they did thirty years ago?

Teacher—Can any of you girls tell me what makes the Tower of Pisa lean?

Fat Girl—I don't know. If I did I'd take some of it myself.

The new theatre will have its opening some time the latter part of next month—and don't be surprised if we get a new name for it.

The basketball game at New Haven, the other night, between the Panthers and Rockets was a scream. It seems the dope bucket was used and that the Panthers, P-T-A. stole a little of the Rockets' (faculty) thunder and did the rocketing themselves.

With this little reminder, we are going to take the typewriter off our knees and put it back on the desk. Don't forget to contribute to or attend one of the dances to be held on Saturday night, Jan. 29th in honor of President Roosevelt's birthday, to raise money to aid in the fight against infantile paralysis. We hope to see you at one of them.

The recently remodelled home of Mrs. Jake Clek was the scene for the January gathering of the New Haven Homemakers when they met last Friday for both morning and afternoon sessions. Mrs. John Taylor club leader with Mrs. Clek gave interesting discussions on the Assets of Accessories for the Home, using the appointments selected by the hostess. Following the business meeting dinner, which had been prepared by the members, was served. Mrs. Jesse Delshunt of Union was among the guests for the day.

William Claycamp of Covington and Mrs. Hayden Callahan of Cincinnati, and Mrs. E. H. Van Winkle of Circleville, O., were guests of Mr. and Mrs. John B. Johnson of South Walton, Sunday.

Big Bone Park Park Proposed

Project Indorsed By Northern Ky. Senator and Representatives

The 200th anniversary of the founding of Big Bone Lick, will be celebrated next year, according to a joint statement issued by Senator Paul L. Siderbottom and Representative G. C. Ransom, Grant county.

A delegation of citizens from this county conferred with Senator Siderbottom and Representative Ransom relative to introduction of a bill to make the area in the vicinity of Big Bone Lick a state park.

Senator Siderbottom and Representative Ransom have arranged a conference with Bailey P. Wootton Director of State Parks of the Department of Conservation, relative to the preparation and introduction of such a bill.

The area to be taken over contains about 40 acres.

Other Senators and Representatives from Northern Kentucky indorsed the proposed bill and pledged their support to the Grant county legislators, who also represent Boone county in the General Assembly.

In a joint statement issued by Senator Siderbottom and Representative Ransom, they said: "In 1739 M. Longueuil, a French-Canadian explorer descending the Ohio river from Canada discovered Big Bone Lick in Boone county."

"This was long before Dr. Thomas Walker, Daniel Boone or Simon Kenton had come to Kentucky."

"A most remarkable locality was found at the lick, for there a large number of bones, perfectly sound and well preserved, were found. Many of them have been dug up and while perhaps no complete skeleton has been found, yet it has been computed by geologists they represent more than 150 animals."

"Some of the animals, especially the mastodon, were of extraordinary size, and while they are extinct today, they can be no doubt, geologically speaking, they were recent tenants of the earth."

"A number of these skeletons, more or less perfect, of this immense animal have been exhumed and their bones examined by geologists from the Universities of Kentucky and Cincinnati, as well as the Smithsonian Institute in Washington. Similar institutions in London and other cities of the world also have on display the bones of these immense animals."

"Big Bone Lick is indeed a scenic and historic place and while hundreds of tourists visit the place every year, still, if it was made a state shrine or park, as a monument to the founder of this 'historic spot' many thousands of tourists would visit the place."

Among those from Boone county who conferred with Senator Siderbottom and Representative Ransom relative to the anniversary celebration and the making of a state park out of the lick were Walter Ferguson, Conner Carroll, Robert Hensley, Thomas Back, Forrest Back, Robert Woods, Omar Atha, Rose Atha, Harry Moore and David Miller.

HARDWOOD HIGHLIGHTS

By MAOL-CHOLM

BEARCATS BEST BEECHWOOD

On Friday night of last week at the local hardwood, the Walton-Verona Hoopmen defeated the Beechwood basketball team 28 to 18. The Cats lead throughout the tilt and were in front 16 to 8 at the half. The locals controlled the ball the greater part of the time, but were unable to hit the basket with any degree of accuracy. For the winning Cats, Osborn set the scoring pace with 13 points, and McClure was next with 7, and defensively Chapman was outstanding. For the losers, Leeds and Lumsden, divided 12 points for the bulk of Beechwood's scoring.

In the preliminary contest, the Walton Cubs were the winners, 20 to 9, with "Midge" McElroy leading the way with 11 points.

BEARCATS SCORE THRILLING 1-POINT VICTORY OVER NEWPORT WILDCATS

Tuesday night at the Walton gym the Bearcats reached deep into the magic hat of basketball and pulled out a thrilling 21 to 20 win over the Newport Wildcats. The Wildcats have not been going so well this year and "little" Walton's victory was adding insult to injury or far as the Newporters were concerned.

Soon after the opening whistle the locals took the lead, and though at no time commanding, were never headed by the invaders. At the half Walton was in front 12 to 9. In the last half the Wildcats gained ground on the Bearcats, but were unable to catch the Waltonites, the game ending the contest at 21-20 in honor of Walton.

Osborn, Walton's ace forward, was high scorer of the game with 13 points, and McDonald, Newport center, took second honors with 7 points. Chapman and McClure were outstanding defensively for the winners, and Zechella looked for the losers.

It has been many a moon since the Bearcats have scored a win over the Postermen, and the boys, as well as the spectators, are proud of their achievement.

In the preliminary game, the Newport Reserves defeated the Walton Cubs, 28 to 18.

Phosphorus Is NowMade and Shipped*in Tank Car Lots

New York. — Phosphorus, the chemical element which bursts into flame when exposed to air, is now being produced, and shipped, in tank car lots to open up a new field for chemical industry.

This achievement is being hailed as one of the outstanding chemical industrial developments of the year. It has just been recognized by the presentation here of the Chemical and Metallurgical Engineering award to the Monsanto Chemical company for this development.

Phosphorus has long interested scientists. Its spontaneous burning is fascinating as well as dangerous. Because it ignites easily and glows in the dark, the ancient alchemists named the element phosphorus mirabilis—"miraculous bearer of light."

Of Vast Importance.

In life and death, peace and war, industry and agriculture, phosphorus is an element of vital importance to modern civilization. When you eat cakes or other bakery products made with baking powder, the action of phosphorus is entering your system. When you strike a match, the sparks and flame come from the phosphorus present. There is phosphorus in your bones and those of all animals. And the farmer requires phosphorus fertilizer to replenish his soil so that crops will grow. In war—in the air, on the ground or on the oceans—phosphorus comes into its own as the creator of dense smoke screens which shield a military force from its enemies. Deadly poisons—used commercially to exterminate rats—contain phosphorus.

For years the phosphorus in animal bones was the principal source of the strange element. But gradually it was found that the best treatment of the phosphorus in certain rocks could be removed as a vapor and condensed under water to yield the waxy-colored element.

New Method of Production.

The newer way, and the method for which the award was made, is a process in which the phosphorus company received the current award, is to obtain the phosphorus with the heat of an electric furnace.

Sand, rock containing calcium phosphate, and coke are fed into the electric furnace. In the high temperature of the carbon arc (6,620 degrees Fahrenheit) the three raw products react to create carbon phosphorus. The phosphorus is in the form of a vapor. Because the phosphorus readily and dangerously combines with air, the whole industrial operation must be carried out under reduced pressure or else in a vapor of hydrogen or nitrogen.

Purification of the phosphorus vapor condensed under water can be accomplished by passing the element and stirring it. Or certain oxidizing agents like potash can be used to remove impurities.

With the air still excluded, the purified phosphorus can be sealed in steel drums or even in tank cars and shipped to the chemical plants which turn the element into any of the many uses just described.

Streamlined HighwaysUrged by Road Experts

Washington.—A chorus of pleas for streamlining America's highways was voiced here at sessions of the highway research board of the National Research council.

America's 15,000,000 pleasure-bound drivers, and the 8,000,000 others who make their living on the road, deserve and need highways that are safe and relaxing. It was stated generally at the session of the joint committee on roadside development.

Telephone poles, unsightly ditches, narrow shoulders, bare slopes attacked by erosion that endangers the road itself were all thoroughly criticized by leading highway engineers from every part of the United States.

Pointing to a photographic exhibition of the type of work that has been done and to what can be better done, H. J. Neale, chairman of the committee, asserted that these modern streamlined highways will prove cheaper in the long run.

"I don't know whether they will be 20 per cent or 80 per cent cheaper because we haven't got suitable figures yet," he declared, "but highways whose sides and shoulders are properly designed cost considerably less for maintenance once the road is built."

Wide shoulders—to allow cars to park well off the road and to remove the hazard represented by the ditch; wayside rests—to allow the fatigued driver a chance to relax; slopes planted with grass and shrubs—to prevent erosion from carrying earth and rocks down on to a road cut through a hillside or to prevent erosion from undercutting the bed of a road raised above the countryside, were among the things urged on the board by speakers.

The old type of road with its unsightly ditches is expensive to maintain, Mr. Neale further declared. Erosion from bare slopes fills the ditches. "It costs money to clear them," he pointed out. In addition ditches are dangerous to the automobilist.

THE COUNTRY POSTOFFICE

Within the last twenty years thousands of country postoffices have been discontinued, and rural mail routes now reach nearly everywhere. Many people old enough to vote have never known the strange thrill of going after the mail; all that is necessary is to walk to the main road and open the mail box.

In the days when the mail came only twice or three times a week, one really got up a lot of enthusiasm for what might come. Letters were fairly rare, but they were treated highly, regardless of their contents. Rarely was one destroyed; they were kept and read over and over from time to time. Once a month came a small story magazine, printed away up in Maine, where paper is cheap. We got two such, which would be readily recognizable if we were to name them. I sought the opportunity to go after the mail when one of these was expected, for I would thus get the first chance at the continued stories and want to tell the lother lady fortunate ones all I had read. Mrs. Wilson's ST. ELMO, tearful and melodramatic ran for twenty-one months in one of these small magazines and always left off each installment at the moment of greatest suspense. We had to wait a whole month before we could sleep well, and then we were left in an equally fearful place in the novel. Thomas Dixon's THE LEOPARD'S SPOTS, that rather moving novel of Reconstruction, I always associated in my mind with a certain gravelly hillside where I was thrown by the old family maid while I was burying my head in the twice-a-week newspaper in which this was appearing. I do not know what the phenologists would say about it, but a certain place above my right ear is still sensitive to tales of the unpleasant days following the Civil War.

There used to be more importance attached to mailing letters and cards as well as to receiving them. How big a fellow felt when he marched into the general store where the postoffice was housed and bought some stamps or some postal cards! A certain amount of Scotchness often made us use postal cards, even though we knew the postmaster would read them and also the postmaster at the other end of the line. Thus one always could count on three readers: the person addressed and the two postmasters. That was taken for granted, just as listening in on a conversation on a party line, then and now. When some of us were just about grown, the picture postcard came into style. Then we really were important, for those first cards were of many kinds. Some were in the form of old-fashioned slates, with messenger printed poorly, the S's and N's turned around the wrong way. One such card has supplied me with many an illustration for my classes in grammar. The message read: "The more I see some people, the better I like my dog." Picture postcards got to be a means of decoration for the front room, since they were exhibited on racks made for the purpose. This postcard rack lived for years with the stereoscope and its pictures in popularity. When the beau on Sunday afternoon was hard to entertain, he could be shown the cards on the rack, with the privilege of reading their messages. Rarely these days could one be sure that his written words would be read as long after they were written as were these messages on postcards.

To many of us, who get the mail once or often a day, the importance of the institution seems much less impressive than it used to. We take it as a matter of course, forgetting how we used to wait breathlessly until the postmaster could sort out the few letters and newspapers.

Farmers Plan Soils and Crops Meeting

Farmers in Burlington 1938 Community Program of Work have planned for a county soils and crops school to be held at Burlington on Friday, February 25th, according to H. E. White, chairman of the community program and Mark Cook chairman of the soils and crop improvement planning project.

The services of Prof. George Roberts head of the Agronomy Department and Prof. E. J. Kinney, Chief of crops Department and Manager of the Experiment Station farm at the College of Agriculture of the University of Kentucky at Lexington have been secured for the meeting.

Prof. Roberts is rated as one of the outstanding soils research men of the country. He will discuss the experimental results of lime, phosphate, manure and commercial fertilizers in the production of pasture, hay, corn and tobacco crops. Prof. Kinney is also rated as an outstanding research worker and teacher and is in charge of the hybrid corn breeding work in Kentucky. He will discuss the experimental work with the various clover grass, tobacco and corn crops.

This meeting will be of interest to all farmers in the county. All are invited to attend and are urged to set down the date of February 25th and make plans to be present.

Farmers in the nine other 1938 Community Agricultural Programs of work have planned important Agricultural Improvement Projects to be carried out this year.

30 Attend Poultry School
 Thirty poultrymen attended the annual one-day poultry school held at Burlington last week. The outlook for improved poultry conditions this year is bright, according to the reports of the speakers and poultrymen attending the meeting.

J. E. Humphrey, poultry specialist and Dr. T. P. Polk, veterinarian from the college, were the principal speakers on the program. Mr. Humphrey pointed out that the outlook for poultry production this year was in a healthy condition. He stated that the number of chickens on the farm way below normal, that the production per hen during the winter months was much higher than usual and with cheap feed and prospects for a much larger hatch of baby chicks, this year will likely bring greater profits to poultrymen.

The importance of using B. W. D. and disease free chicks of good breeding and the careful following of a clean chick brooding program will determine to a large extent the relative profits to individual poultrymen.

Dr. T. P. Polk warned poultrymen that diseases in poultry as well as other classes of livestock are increasing at an alarming rate. The control of these diseases is not thru medicine but thru a clean chick program involving the best in sanitation practices. Clean chick, clean ground and equipment and control of flies and insects are the basis of disease control.

Grant Maddox gave a thirty minute discussion before the group of the results of fourteen years experience in the keeping of complete cost of production records on his flock. His flock during this period had increased from forty birds to the present when more than 3,000 chicks were raised.

Hubert Conner and Grant Maddox local poultrymen reported they had large capacity for hatching baby chicks both for sale and their own use.

Mrs. Bert Loomis and Mrs. Thomas Hensley reported favorable experiences in raising young turkeys in poultry brooder houses. Mrs. Cad Sullivan and Mrs. Hensley reported much success in using the home-made brick brooders in supplying heat for baby chicks.

The poultrymen present made plans for the holding of a late spring tour to study brooding practices being followed by leading poultrymen. A fall tour was also planned to study methods of handling pullets previous to putting them in the laying house.

About St. Patrick

In the Gaule mountains which are situated between the counties of Cork and Tipperary in Ireland there are seven lakes. In one of these, called Lough Dilvein, it is said Saint Patrick, when banishing the snakes and toads from Ireland, chained a monster serpent, telling him to remain there till Monday. Irish legend has it that every Monday morning the serpent coils out in Irish, "It is a long Monday, Patrick!"

Weaver Birds of Africa

Rank as Best Architects

Three habitat groups of African birds in Field Museum of Natural History, Chicago, include village weaver-birds, birds of Mount Cameroon and Kalahari desert birds.

Weavers, which constitute the largest and most varied bird family of Africa, rank among the best architects of the feathered world, and the village weaver-birds are among the most skillful nest builders of their family. Their globe-shaped nests are woven from strips of grass or palm leaves. "Woven" is not a loosely used term, but an accurate description of the method employed by the birds.

Detailed studies of the nests of another weaver species have revealed that certain definite knots are used to tie the ends of the strips of material—they are not merely tucked in. A firmly woven vertical ring about six inches in diameter is first made by the birds to serve as a foundation. The hemispherical chamber for the eggs and young is then added on one side, and the downward spout or entrance is added on the other.

The village weaver-birds exemplify a highly gregarious mode of living coupled with a peculiar preference for association with conditions imposed by the existence of socially organized human life. Rather than remain exposed to purely natural conditions involving greater dangers from predators, they build their colonies or "villages" as many as a hundred nests in trees near the villages of human beings. This habit accounts for the name that has been applied to them. These birds occur over a wide area of western and central Africa.

Peat, After Many Years, Develops Into Hard Coal

Peat, according to scientists, is coal in the making. It consists of decayed trees and vegetation.

When the world was younger, say about 250 million years ago, in the carboniferous era, there were many peat bogs, writes a correspondent in the Chicago Tribune. Eventually the peat became lignite, then soft or bituminous coal, as in today's, then hard, or anthracite, as in Pennsylvania. Something like this happened:

The ancient peat beds sank below sea level, and over eons of time the beds were buried under thick layers of silt and sand.

Tremendous pressure upon the peat squeezed the water from them, and after several hundred thousand years, peat became lignite, a brownish coal which crumbles rapidly when exposed to the air. The pressure continued and, after some two million years, the lignite became soft coal. And when the earth exerted both a horizontal and vertical pressure, as in maintaining hard coal resulted.

Peat, because of its great moisture load, has little value as fuel. Its heating value is about half that of lignite, according to estimates by Prof. Adolf Ne of the University of Chicago, a member of the Illinois geological survey staff, and about one-fourth that of hard coal.

King Midas Had Donkey Ears

King Midas, although the world's richest man, had donkey's ears. So the legend tells us. And his barber, unable to contain the dreadful secret, whispered it into a hole in the ground. And the reeds that grew up the spot, says Science Service, repeated his whisper and betrayed the secret. All of this, declares Prof. Robert Lehmann-Nitsche of Berlin, is simply effort on the part of the Greeks to explain the fact that this half-fabulous Oriental monarch wore a cap consisting of a horse's or wild antelope's ears and part of the mane attached. Professor Lehmann-Nitsche has found widespread evidence of the wearing of such ear-ornamented caps in early times. Later, when metal helmets replaced the original hide caps, they were ornamented with erect metal ears. And the horsehair crests that adorn the fancy dress helmets of some heavy cavalry corps are a last remnant of the mane that hung from the horse's scalp caps of ancient hunter-kings.

Betsy Ross' Name

Ross was Betsy Ross' maiden name, says the Philadelphia Inquirer. She was the daughter of Samuel and Rebecca Ross. In 1772 she eloped to Gloucester, N. J., with John Ross, an uplander, and there married him. It was as the widow of Ross that she achieved fame by her reputed making of the first American flag. In 1777 she married Capt. Joseph Ashburne at Old Swedes church. Ashburne was captured by the British and died in Old Mill prison, Plymouth, England. In 1783 she married John Claypoole.

Historic Reminders in Lima

In Lima, Peruvian capital dating from the early Spanish days of the Fifteenth century, are notable monuments reminiscent of the viceroys, the University of San Marcos, the oldest seat of learning in the Western hemisphere, and the finest examples of Spanish colonial architecture in existence. Adjacent to modern Lima are the ancient ruins of the pre-conquest peoples and the dead city of Coeval, which vies with Babylon in its antiquity—Rocky Mountain Herald.

Snake as Medicine

Familiar in Many Countries and Ages

New York.—Serpents twain wreathed the staff of Aesculapius, classic patron of medicine; a brazen serpent upraised in the desert healed the stricken Israelites who only looked on it.

How deeply entwined with medicine are everywhere and in all times is the subtle snake, Clifford H. Pope bears witness in his new book, "Snakes Alive" (Viking Press).

We are used to hearing, in a superior sort of way, about the weird ingredients of native Chinese drug-messes, and so are not surprised to learn that the Chinese pharmacopoeia includes snake "saliva, skin, bile, flesh, fat and oil, head, eye balls, eggs, and bones."

Snake Oil in America.

Yet "snake oil" is still a widely sold commodity in these Enlightened States of America—and it is usually faked at that! Federal seizure and condemnation of "rattle-snake oil liniment" that contained "little if any snake oil" is a matter of recent record. And in France a "treacle" of snake-ingredients survived as official remedy as late as 1884.

Two hundred years ago, a favorite English remedy for scurvy was "viper bread," which contained powdered viper's flesh and sarsaparilla. But real snake oil was recommended, "compound tincture of vipers" which was declared very successful in the Great Plague of London in 1665.

In 1885 M. de Seville, one of the most cultured of Frenchmen, recommended vipers in one of his famous letters:

"Be temper, purify, and refresh the blood. But real snake oil was recommended, "compound tincture of vipers" which was declared very successful in the Great Plague of London in 1665.

"Take a couple every morning, and the heads, have them skinned and chopped up and stuffed in a chicken. Do this for a month, and then blame your brother if M. de Grignan does not become as well as we could wish him to be."

African Women Gang Up To Protect Their Rights

Philadelphia.—African women gang together to safeguard "women's rights" and they meet in secret society—no men allowed.

An American expedition has found, studying the little-known Sherbro people of Sierra Leone, in British West Africa.

Both men and women of this tribe have their secret societies, from which the opposite sex is rigidly excluded. H. U. Hall told the American Philosophical society here, reporting a study of customs sponsored by the society and the University museum, University of Pennsylvania.

Until British authority became effective in southern Sierra Leone, the men's secret society held even more power than the native chieftains, especially in maintaining law and order. It is still powerful and flourishing, Mr. Hall said. Not to be a "Porro" man, as the society is called is not to be a man at all, in Sherbro opinion.

"The counterpart of the Porro, for Sherbro women," said Mr. Hall, "is the Bondo society. It is the champion of women's rights and privileges. Novices are instructed in these and in the duties of seclusion in the Bondo Bush, or grove, similar to that undergone by Porro initiates in their Bush."

Dual Personality Is Created by Curare Use

Philadelphia.—Dual personality has been created experimentally in the psychological laboratory at the University of Illinois, by the use of the South American arrow poison, curare. Dr. E. A. Culler told the meeting of the American Philosophical society here.

Active learning in one personality are forgotten during life in the other personality, he said. Dogs were the subjects of this Jekyll-Hyde experiment, and, by depressing the brain caused the animals to act on a different level of the nervous system.

Normally, learning takes place in the cortex of the brain, but when the brain is affected by a powerful drug such as curare, learning can take place at a lower level involving, presumably, subcortical parts of the nervous system.

But what is learned during the normal personality is forgotten under the influence of curare. What is learned during the curare personality, when the animal is functioning at the lower level, is similarly forgotten when he returns to his normal personality.

Land of Contradictions
Jamaica is a land of contradictions even in its native music. In the primitive communities, all kinds are used for drums, and black hags take the place of drumsticks.

Bronze Used by Romans

in Their Early Plows

Flows used by the early Romans had a detachable pole, held to the beam by wooden pegs. The share was last in place by a bolt. The outline of the forked tree remained, but the tree itself has been replaced by separate parts fashioned by craftsmen.

Today's plow applied to the plow their highly developed artistry in bronze and iron, according to a writer in the Rural New-Yorker.

These metals had been discovered in the East some 4,000 years earlier—the discovery of bronze and the invention of writing roughly coincide and mark the beginning of the historic period, only 5,000 or 6,000 years ago; iron came about 1,000 years later than bronze.

The Romans made shares and moldboards of metal and added a wheel from the warrior's chariot—to control and regulate the depth of plowing.

The ancient Spanish plow shows an early stage in the development of the modern moldboard. Until the moldboard came the plow merely gashed the soil to permit the placing of seeds. Afterward it became a tillage implement in itself. By 1851 Scottish plows were made entirely of metal, the moldboard of cast iron, the share, beam, handles and coulters of cast iron.

The early English furrow had an inverted V-shape. The top of the furrow was not crumpled and the plow was not required to pulverize the soil. Seed, broadcast by hand, rolled down into the grooves between the lapping furrows, to be easily covered by the drags or wooden harrows that followed. This custom set the standard for plowing in England and it is still popular there.

The story of the English Windsor chair is the king, stopping to rest at an English farmhouse, was attracted by one chair he saw there and ordered a set made and sent to Windsor castle. The English Windsor is quite common in England and occasionally is to be found here, states a writer in the Los Angeles Times. They are a sturdy type of chair, in the early examples showing their Dutch influence. The American craftsmen, however, developed a wider diversity of form and a greater delicacy of line than is found in the English prototype.

There are a number of forms of Windsor chairs. The loop-back side chair is the most common. In the armchair this loop is carried forward in an unbroken curve to form the arms. This curved bow-shaped piece divides the back horizontally and curving forward forms the arms.

The fan backs have a horizontal curved bow-piece at the top from which the spindles slant inward toward the seat. The comb-back, another form, has a headrest added in the shape of a miniature fan-back. There is also a smaller Windsor chair with a straight-topped back and square shoulders.

The first Windsor were made for porch and garden. It is said General Washington had 30 of these chairs on the veranda at Mt. Vernon. However, such chairs soon found a home indoors as well as out and were used both in the country and town. They were used not only in homes but in public places as well. In the Pennsylvania museum at Philadelphia are shown Windsor chairs used by the first Continental congress.

Socrates O. K.'d Dancing
Socrates, famous old Greek scholar, thought dancing kept people contented, so ranked it among the most important branches of learning, notes a writer in the Washington Post. Louis XIV of France had a lot of worries, too, so he took up ballet dancing. Ancient Egyptians also thought dancing meant happiness.

At their "balls," a mummy was prominently displayed to remind merrymakers that the dance of life could go on forever and that they should make the most of their joy while they could!

"Sino" Combined With Japanese
"Sino" instead of "Chinese" is combined with Japanese because it is more euphonious. It is derived from "Sini," the Greek and Latin name for an Oriental people mentioned by Ptolemy, who lived in the second century, A. D., and supposed to have been the Chinese. Some writers, however, prefer "Chino" to "Sino" and write "Chino-Japanese" after the analogy of "Russo-Japanese," "Franco-Prussian," etc.

El Temple in Havana
The temple in Havana dates from 1827 and commemorates the landing at Puerta Carraon of Don Diego Velazquez in 1519. An obelisk bears an inscription commemorating the mass sung at the town meeting held at the time in the shade of a giant siba tree. A tree shading El Temple is believed to be a slip from the original tree, cut down in 1753.

Christmas Bride

CHAPTER VI—Margaret, resting in the railway station, broods over the suspicious card by the head nurse on her supposed benefactor and the needed job addressing circulars. The job last three days, and Margaret spends the three nights in the railway station, going to the post office and sending a letter from home, full of worry about her and adding her for a contribution of twenty-five dollars to the payment on the mortgage.

"Depend on me, Money Throwing," Margaret said, with a sudden thought of Margaret, hands alive over to Morrie as having a prior claim, and takes his leave of the key party.

CHAPTER VII—Greg's friend Rhoderick Steele arrives at the house in town. Mrs. Gwynn finds Grandmother's address in Vermont, hears all the news of the mortgage from her neighbor. In his new car, he drives to Rodman street and meets Margaret leaving with her baggage. She had hidden the twenty-five dollars in her purse, and sent it home. He takes her to the hospital to prove the reality of the mortgage, and to receive an apology from the head nurse. He pays her a month's salary in advance, and she works sending out religious pamphlets. Alice calls and leaves a note for Margaret, saying she is in a awful fix. Greg phones her, and she tells him in Margaret's hearing, telling her he has no money to pay anybody's gambling debts.

"Oh," said Greg, "you needn't worry about that. I brought along a turkey! It's been there for a week, and I'll give it to you."

"I think you must be related to a fairy godmother!" she said, her eyes starting. "I never saw anybody with money before you used it in these beautiful ways."

"I'm glad you're pleased!" said Greg. "I got to thinking maybe you would think I was presumptuous!"

"But say, wouldn't it be a good time for those chicken sandwiches? I believe I'm hungry."

Margaret produced the box and the thermos bottle and they ate merrily time at the side of the road.

They stopped for lunch early in the afternoon and Greg made her take a rest on the couch in the empty parlor of a country hotel while he went to a garage to have the car looked over.

They began to feel as if they had known one another for a long time. They had come into Vermont now and the mountains towered about them.

As they drew near Crystal Lake Greg was watching the girl by his side. Her eyes were starting with excitement, her cheeks were flushed, her lips were parted with her eagerness.

"There! Now you can see the post office. There's somebody just coming out. Oh, why, that's Aunt Carrie Pettibone!"

"Aunt Carrie Pettibone!" said Greg with a grin. "How are you, Aunt Carrie?" he called out with a low bow as the car swept on by.

Margaret was convulsed with laughter.

"Now, she won't sleep all night trying to think out who you are! But here, this is our turn."

And then every while they reached the old house grew larger to their approach, till every old-fashioned small-paneled window was visible, a light sparkled out in one window.

"Grandmother! Has she been on the step!" she cried. "She has seen the car and she is watching!"

Then they rounded the curve in the road, came up to the level on which the house was built and the car stopped.

Margaret was in her grandmother's arms. Greg stood behind by the car and waited, his hot face. Grandfather came back from the woodshed, his milk pail in one hand, the lantern in the other. He held the lantern high so that it shone in Greg's face.

"Can't I help?" he said. "I'm fine at milking!"

His voice brought Margaret back from her grandmother's embrace to a sense of her duties as hostess.

"Oh, Grandmother, Grandfather," she cried, "this is Mr. Gregory Sterling, the man I am working for now. He was coming up this way on business and offered to bring me for Thanksgiving!"

Then the old man and his old wife put on their best smiling dignity and welcomed the young man cordially.

"We are greatly indebted to you!" said the old man.

"I shall be grateful to you for ever for bringing her back to me!" said the old lady, reaching out her two hands and taking Greg's in a warm clasp.

"It was a pleasure, I assure you," said Margaret with his nicest smile.

"And now, I'll just unlock the baggage and then I'll be getting out of your way. It isn't right to break up a family meeting like this with the presence of an outsider."

"We do not count our Margaret's employer an outsider," said the old man with old-time courtliness in his snaps, "The fact is he hasn't got it all in yet. That twenty-five you sent was wonderful. Even Grandfather was almost discouraged till that came. I don't know what we're going to do, Margaret."

Margaret's arms were around her again in a minute.

Greg cast in hearing the milk pail with an air of ease that made Margaret stare. Strange, he seemed to be at home anywhere!

"Now," said Greg, sending down the pail, "do I get a drink of milk before I go on my way to Rutland? Where's the strainer? I want to finish the job up thoroughly."

"You're not going to Rutland to-night!" said Grandmother firmly. "You're staying right here with us!"

"Well, you can't make me feel bad asking me to stay all night," said Greg, with his disarming grin. "Bless his heart!" said Grandmother, thoroughly won over: "Of course you'll stay."

"John, there's plenty of wood up in the south chamber!"

"Well, I wouldn't say plenty, but there's some. I'll just run up and start the fire and then it'll be warm by the time he wants to turn in. I'll take up a couple more sticks!"

"I'll take the wood!" said Greg. "Where do I find it? But I'd be comfortable just rolled up in a quilt on that couch. You don't need to fuss up a bedroom for me."

"We're not going to fuss," said Grandmother, "but you're going to sleep in the south chamber. The wood is there in a pile right by the woodshed door. Father'll show you the way up. Margaret, light a candle. John, you'll need to take up a pitcher of water so he can wash his hands. He'll likely want to wash after driving all day. When you come down supper'll be ready. Father, show him where the towels are, and see if there's soap on the wash stand. Don't be too long, for I'm making an omelette. We will have fried apples, and a slice of home-made maple syrup, omelette and fresh brown bread, applesauce, tea and caraway cookies. Does that seem enough?"

"Great," said Greg as he hurried up the old staircase.

The omelette was a golden brown when the two men came downstairs, and Greg ate his share and said he never had tried anything better. But it was the fried apples that gave the greatest attention. He said he had not had any since his mother used to make it. He had tried his own hand at it in his wilderness shack, but it hadn't turned out right.

They had a merry supper, and afterward Greg opened his hamper and brought out the money bag. He even knew the man in the store money and told him to make up a hamper with everything in it that was toward the end of a Thanksgiving dinner. The man had his best. There was a turkey, big enough for a regiment. There were cranberries and sage, flour and baking powder and loaves of bread and pounds of butter.

It was very late for the Lorimers when at last the old farmhouse settled down for the night.

CHAPTER IX

Greg tore himself away from the farm about half-past ten the next morning and went on his way to Rutland. He didn't know a soul in Rutland, and he didn't have any business there, but just to be speaking and the truth he went to see his office. After that he drove back to Crystal Lake as fast as his automobile could travel, and went straight to his city syndicate who had figured out in the way down to the house of one Elias Horner.

Elias Horner had seen the shining car from afar as he drove up to his house and had expected to find one of the city syndicate who were interested in making Crystal Lake a summer resort. So when he entered his house and found a strange young man whom he had never seen before, who introduced himself as a friend of Mr. Lorimer, he frowned heavily.

"So you've come from Lorimer, have you? Well, it's no use your wasting my time and yours trying any smooth words or money. I want my money, and if I don't get my money I'm going to foreclose at once."

"That's entirely satisfactory to me, Mr. Horner," said Greg with a smile. "That's what I've come for, to pay you my money."

"What's the old fighter's jaw shot out like a serpent's tongue, and Elias' little deadly slippery black eyes tried to pierce him, but Greg didn't pierce easily."

"I said I had come to pay the mortgage for Mr. Lorimer. You know it's not easy for him to get down the mountain, so I've undertaken to attend to the matter for him."

"Who are you? How do I know your check is good?"

"Why, did you want it in a check?" asked Greg innocently. "I've brought it in cash."

"Cash!" the old man snapped out the word incredulously. "I guess you don't know how much that mortgage is."

"I know," said Greg steadily. "I know. I'm prepared to pay the whole."

Reluctantly Elias Horner went to the safe back of his desk and got out his papers. He had demanded his money and this casual young stranger had produced it. The farm which had been all but in his grasp, which had been his highest ambition and the dream of several months, in fact, ever since his old neighbor had come to borrow of him, had slipped away from him in a moment, and so unexpectedly!

Greg left presently with a long envelope tucked in his inside pocket and Elias Horner sat by his fire-side fingering the pile of hundred-dollar bills mustily.

Greg had always been close-mouthed, therefore he had no trouble in going back to the farm and enjoying himself hugely all the rest of the day, saying absolutely nothing about his business of the morning, with all the time that long envelope in his inside pocket.

He pulled off his coat and put on an old pair of trousers from the West that he had put in his suitcase, and chopped wood, carried up a lot of it into every bedroom in the house where there was either a fireplace or woodstove, and the wood boxes in the parlor, the dining room, the kitchen and stacked a lot by the woodshed door. Grandfather said he had cut out faster than any man he ever saw.

They had another lovely supper that night, sitting long about it, telling stories, getting to know one another like old friends.

Thanksgiving day dawned bright and clear.

There never could have been a better turkey more perfectly cooked than the one they ate that afternoon, for nobody could make better stuffing than Grandmother Lorimer, and Greg had provided everything possible in the way of materials so that she lacked nothing to her hand.

"I am sure we shall need nothing more to eat for a week!" said Greg as he finally refused another helping of pie. "It's been a dinner to remember. Now, would it be in the nature of a crime if we all just left our tables as it is for a couple of hours and took a ride? It's going to be a fine moon coming up and I thought we could stay out and see it rise."

They had a wonderful ride about the country and over the rugged hills, ending with the panorama of the moonrise.

Greg had not the heart to take Margaret away from the old people at once or he would have hastened away in the morning to begin to work out his plans. So he let himself be persuaded to stay another night, and he and Margaret spent much of the day together out of doors.

That evening he told them of Rhoderick Steele and his friendship and then of his own business and how it had grown since he talked they had. The old man listened and nodded approval.

"And now," said Greg, as they were about to retire for the night, "I'm leaving you both on a Christmas party! Will you come?"

The old people beamed on him lovingly. They thought he was joking.

"But I mean it!" he said. "I'm throwing a party Christmas. It's a house party and it's going to last quite a while. I'm going to try to get Rhoderick Steele to come to it. I want you to know him."

"Well, that would be wonderful, Son," said the old man, smiling wistfully. "But I guess that's impossible. Maybe you can bring him up here to visit us some day when summer comes and it's nice and pleasant here. You know Mother and I are old people, and we aren't much at traveling around any more. Besides, we haven't the money. We may as well tell the truth. We'd enjoy it, I know, but it wouldn't be possible."

"Oh, but," said Greg, "you know Margaret and I are coming up after you. Aren't we, Margaret?" He had not been calling her Margaret before and it made her cheeks rosy to hear it. "We're driving up a week or so before Christmas, and we're going to take you back with us. We'll take you down with us tomorrow, only I haven't got my place fixed up yet and perhaps you'd want a little time to put away your things."

"Oh-hi!" breathed Grandmother in a kind of awe.

But Grandfather continued to smile at an impossibility.

"Well, now, my dear fellow! That's a wonderful offer for you to make, but of course we couldn't let you do it. We thank you with all our hearts—don't we, Rebecca?" and appreciate your suggestion, but we'll just have to wait till you can come and see us again, and we hope it will be mighty soon."

But Greg was not to be put off this easily.

"You see this isn't a regular house party. I've not had any Christmas myself for ten long years and I want one. We are necessary to my plans for a real home Christmas. I want you to be my father and mother, and I want you to adopt you, if you'll let me."

They made a merry time of it getting off, though Margaret and her grandmother had much ado to keep from weeping.

"It won't be long," said Margaret, smiling brightly, as she got into the car at last. "We'll be coming back after you very soon, you know, and we're going to be together Christmas!"

So they drove off into the dawn, and the old people stood at their mountain door, shading their eyes and watching them away.

"Why, Rebecca, What's This?"

Grandfather smiled as he came in from the barn. "Mother, wasn't it good to grieve after her girl after all. And she seemed to have forgotten us mortals quite entirely."

So Grandfather sat down with the old Bible and opened it and there to his surprise was a long narrow envelope lying between the pages. He took it up and turned it over curiously, wondering how it got there. Then he opened the envelope and withdrew a document.

"Why, Rebecca, what's this?" said the old man in great excitement. "What is it? Is it something important?"

"Is it something important?" she asked. Grandfather, with trembling hands, was reading the document, trying to understand what it meant.

"Rebecca!" said the old man, suddenly reaching out his arm and drawing his old wife to his side. "Rebecca! Do you know what this means? It means our mortgage is paid off! It's paid! Rebecca! Every cent! We don't even have to pay the interest! The farm is saved!"

"But I don't understand," said the old lady. "Who did it? Who paid it?"

"Well, I suppose that dear young fellow," said the old man, brushing the mist from his eyes and studying the paper again. "His name isn't on it, but he's a rich fellow who could have done it. Margaret was as much troubled as you and I. She didn't have the money."

"Well, he is just a precious young man. How wonderful! And he knew he'd done that all the time he was urging us to visit him at Christmas! Well, we'll have to go now, won't we, John?" she asked eagerly.

"Well, yes, I guess he should go," he said thoughtfully.

"I wonder why he does it?" said the old lady. "Do you think he's getting fond of our Margaret? Is he doing it to please her?"

"I don't know, Rebecca," said the old man cautiously.

He sat down and wrote a letter to Greg, and the old lady went too, to tell her housework with a song on her lips.

The two young people driving down the mountain had another glorious day together.

Margaret had resolved to take the beauty of the one day and not let it cloud the more formal days that she knew must come afterwards in the office when they should return to the world of real work.

So they rode down the mountain gaily, and continued their comradeship throughout a happy day, eyes meeting in sweet understanding of mutual likes and dislikes, happy awareness of each other.

A few slow, slow snowflakes were zigzagging down as they neared the city, with a promise of more to come, and the streets had a slushy, dismal look. Margaret glanced out and suddenly realized that her beautiful interview was over. Tomorrow and the rest of the days she must go back to considering herself an employee in a reserved and dignified atmosphere.

"A man is coming for me tomorrow," said Greg in a sudden businesslike tone as they drew up at Mrs. Harris' house. "I probably shall not be back till the Sunday night. So I shan't be seeing you this time Monday. If anybody comes in Monday morning you'll know what to say to them."

He helped her out and carried her suitcase in for her. Mrs. Harris and the niece who was still with her came out to meet them, and there was no chance for a parting word. Just a good-night and a smile before everybody, and Margaret felt suddenly the letdown after the wonderful day of companionship.

How Indians Caught Fish. The ancient Indian method of catching fish in primitive Idaho territory was to create eddies in streams by means of dams. When the fish reached the eddies they paused to rest, whereupon the Indians promptly speared or seized them.

HOORAY FOR THEM

By Joseph R. Friesler

Margaret had resolved to take the beauty of the one day and not let it cloud the more formal days that she knew must come afterwards in the office when they should return to the world of real work.

So they rode down the mountain gaily, and continued their comradeship throughout a happy day, eyes meeting in sweet understanding of mutual likes and dislikes, happy awareness of each other.

A few slow, slow snowflakes were zigzagging down as they neared the city, with a promise of more to come, and the streets had a slushy, dismal look. Margaret glanced out and suddenly realized that her beautiful interview was over. Tomorrow and the rest of the days she must go back to considering herself an employee in a reserved and dignified atmosphere.

"A man is coming for me tomorrow," said Greg in a sudden businesslike tone as they drew up at Mrs. Harris' house. "I probably shall not be back till the Sunday night. So I shan't be seeing you this time Monday. If anybody comes in Monday morning you'll know what to say to them."

He helped her out and carried her suitcase in for her. Mrs. Harris and the niece who was still with her came out to meet them, and there was no chance for a parting word. Just a good-night and a smile before everybody, and Margaret felt suddenly the letdown after the wonderful day of companionship.

Harold Arlen, born in Buffalo, composer of "Stormy Weather," "Love A Parade," "Between the Devil and the Deep Blue Sea" and other familiar tunes, was writing the music for "Hooray for What?" and "Love A Parade," which will soon be his radio round.

The Squire's Chance

By SALLY LLOYD
© McClure Newspaper Syndicate, WNU Service.

SQUIRE ANDERSON and his wife faced each other across the breakfast table. Maria was thinking that there was nothing under the sun more movable than the Squire, unless it was one of the older and wiser pyramids. But all she said was:

"You've smeared your chin again, dear!"

And that was enough. It never failed to madden the Squire when his wife reminded him that he had daubed egg on his chin.

"I forgot you, absolutely forgot you, to buy a ticket on that car, Maria," barked the Squire. "You know very well how I feel about games of chance. It is most unfortunate that a man in my position should have a wife who is cursed with the gambler's itch."

"Is that anything like the barber's itch or the Scotch itch?" asked Maria, her face an innocent mask.

The Squire saw his hot-blooded ego through a faint film of red. Maria could be a meek-eyed she-devil when she chose! He checked angrily and then spat forth the piece of resistance of all their gambling arguments.

"Remember the lot you bought in Florida, right enough," he spluttered. "Remember the thousand you sank in a hunk of land under the 10 feet of water and full of crocodiles!"

"There's a little dripping of malediction on your chin, dear."

The Squire pushed back his chair noisily and slammed out of the house. He drew on his coat and slapped his hat angrily on top of his skull. As he crossed the street he prayed that a truck would run him down. But he lived to cross the street and to take his neighbor Smith hail him jovially.

"By the way, old man," began Smith, after good-mornings had been exchanged. "I do hope you won't mind my mentioning it, but there's quite a smear of egg on your chin."

The Squire had never liked Smith, and he would have cheerfully drawn and quartered him at that moment. But Smith was president of the local bank and Anderson was forced to be polite to him. As a matter of fact, the Squire was planning to touch Smith for a little loan that very morning.

"Take a chance on a car?" asked Smith, settling his bulk comfortably behind the Squire. "My wife's pet charity, you know—this bazaar where they're going to raffie it off. Proceeds to go to a working girl's home or something. Very worthy. Take a chance?"

And he drew out a bunch of tickets. The Squire opened his mouth and shut it again.

"You know how I feel about games of chance," he began.

Smith's face hardened imperceptibly. He started to put the tickets back in his pocket. The Squire felt a sudden coolness in the temperature.

"But of course I make an occasional exception. This I can see is a very worthy cause, so I'll buy one."

"You'd never win it, anyway," consoled Smith, becoming genial again. "They're selling thousands of tickets."

The Squire put the ticket in his pocket gingerly. It was three or four days later that he went through his pockets only to find that the ticket had disappeared.

"Lost," muttered the Squire.

"What are you looking for?" asked his wife, staring at him queerly.

"Nothing," returned the Squire coldly, "nothing at all."

"Mrs. Smith asked me today if I'd bought a ticket on the car they're going to raffie off at the bazaar. I told her that you disapproved very strongly of gambling."

The raffling of the automobile was the very last item performed at the banker's wife's pet charity bazaar. Squire Anderson watched his wife sternly as the tickets were shaken up in a large box and a weedy youth dipped down into it and drew forth a slip of paper.

"Number 11437," he shouted.

"Wheel!" she squealed. Maria always squealed when excited—it was one of the many things that her husband deplored in her.

"E-e-e-e-k!" she gasped wildly, beating her way through the crowd and on up to the weedy youth, who examined her ticket.

"Mrs. Anderson wins the car," shouted the boy. "Someone cheered and someone else yelled, 'Speech!'"

The Squire's ears burned. To his horror, he saw her leap to a table. She said something about being pleased about having had only one ticket.

"And I didn't buy it myself," she raved on, "I found the ticket in my husband's pants when I went through the pockets before sending them to the cleaners."

Afterwards Maria claimed that she had not intended to say anything about that, but the excitement of the moment had swept her off her feet.

"This kind of makes up for the crocodiles I bought in Florida," she said that night.

The Squire was inarticulate.

Worst Fire In Years Occurred Saturday

Kroger Grocery and Apartment Destroyed

Three Persons Burned Origin Undetermined

Large Throng Watches Blaze

Saturday, shortly after noon, a spectacular explosion and fire, in which three persons were burned, destroyed a two-story frame building housing the Kroger grocery and an apartment, in the business section of Walton. The loss was estimated near $10,000.

The injured were Harold Conrad 21, Walton, clerk in the store, Bryan Reitor, Nicholas, a customer, and Rayburn Simpson, 16, Walton newspaper vendor. Burns on their faces were treated by Dr. R. E. Ryle and Dr. F. E. Bedinger.

The explosion, which was heard all over the business district, occurred in the rear of the building breaking out the door and windows hurling merchandise and glass out on the street.

Flames and smoke poured out of the structure, threatening other buildings on the main street.

Harold Conrad was just starting to enter the store when the explosion came, and the other two, Reitor and Simpson were on the sidewalk, in front of the store.

The apartment, which was on the second floor of the building, was occupied by W. K. Williams and family, who were not at home, and all of their personal belongings were destroyed.

The Walton Volunteer Fire Department was waging a good battle that was afraid that the flames would break out and spread to other buildings, near by, and called upon the Fire Departments of Florence Elsmere and South Ft. Mitchell to aid in quelling the flames. After a three-hour battle from the combined efforts of the four departments the blaze was extinguished.

This was the third time that the building standing on this site had been destroyed by fire.

The building and the furniture in the apartment were owned by the estate of the late Mrs. Ollie Curley and were insured by the Edward Insurance Agency.

This was the first fire of any consequence in the downtown section of Walton, in many years, and the site was witnessed by a large throng of spectators, estimated to be near 500. Traffic, which was heavy, was handled very nicely by Walton police, and was blocked at 10 o'clock.

AFTER THOUGHTS

By GEORGE

We want to congratulate the firemen of the Elsmere, South Ft. Mitchell, Florence and our own Walton Volunteer Department for the gallant effort put forth Saturday, in order to hold the blaze and extinguish it before spreading to other buildings.

The weather man just softens us up for these cold snaps. First it is winter and then it warms up, giving us thoughts of birds and green pastures—and again we get Old Man Winter.

The Bears cats won three games last week—Newport, Florence and Simon Kenton. After watching the boys against Florence, we sometimes wonder—it didn't look like the same team that won from Newport. They boys didn't pull together and that made them look terrible.

Sunday night winter hit, making the highways a sheer road of ice. This makes dangerous driving, but if you are out in this kind of weather, remember two things—Drive slowly, drive carefully.

The fire here Saturday was the worst the town had seen for some time. We have often wondered what would happen if a fire did break out in that section. Thanks to modern fire-fighting equipment and methods, for it could have been much worse. This is the third time that a building has burned on the same foundation.

The Volunteer Firemen are to have a clubhouse headquarters under the Dixie State Bank building. We like the idea, and it should have been done long ago. It will stimulate interest among the members and help to increase the department.

According to the Bureau of Federal Investigation, the men on the inside of the banks are the worst. More than four times as many bankers and employees were convicted last year, than robbers.

The new building for the University of Louisville Law School will contain some rare gifts of books from Supreme Court Justice, Louis D. Brandeis.

Several of our correspondents have asked us to send stationery and we do not know their names. Please send name and address when materials are wanted.

With the projects under consideration and construction going at a good speed, people will soon be back at work. Locally is the proposed Big Bone park.

The tobacco plants close the middle of the month. So if you have any tobacco you want to sell, hurry.

The Regional basketball Tourney is to be held at Covington, this year. Why is it Walton can't land this meet? It looks as though they should get it here occasionally.

The annual all-star Major League baseball game for the benefit of unfortunate players is to be held at Cincinnati, this year. This means you can see your favorites of both leagues, almost here at home. Too bad for us—it's on a Tuesday.

ONE TOO MANY—

We get results! This week we had two applications for the free advertising space furnished by J. L. Hamilton. The Walton P-T-A made their reservation last Friday and on Monday we received a request from the ladies of the Concord Church, which we were unable to use in that space. First come, first served, you know.

Mrs. Pearl R. Johnson, who is spending part of the winter in Lexington, arrived here Wednesday for a few days visit and to attend the meeting of the Past Worthy Matrons and Past Worthy Patrons of the Elsmere Star, held Wednesday night in the Masonic Temple, Covington.

Feed the Birds

When the Weather Is Bad, and Repay Them For Their Services

According to Raymond J. Fleetwood, biologist who has charge of the wildlife program of the Soil Conservation Camps in Kentucky, the past few days of stormy weather have worked hardships upon the song and game birds that are allies of the farmer, orchardist, and gardener in combating insect enemies. In normal weather our feathered friends are able to find sufficient food, which in winter consists chiefly of weed seed and waste grain. However, when snow and ice cover the ground the food supply is partially concealed and many individual birds suffer from cold due to lack of nourishment. Birds do not usually suffer from cold if they have sufficient food to keep up the body warmth. When this temperature comes too low, birds usually succumb to cold. Farmers and Sportsmen who desire to repay the birds for their services as insect and weed destroyers and sport can do so by feeding the birds at this time. Even though it is thought that the birds will be able to obtain sufficient food, an excess of available food will mean that the birds will come through the winter in a better physical condition to begin the breeding season.

Birds are not particular about the food they eat. Weed seed and chaff from the loft will be relished as much as screening from the mill. If one wishes to be more extravagant, wheat, corn, kafir, or other grains can be scattered about a food. Quail can eat whole grain corn, but many song birds cannot do so.

A more important point than the kind of food is the distribution of the grain in relation to cover. Grain thrown out some distance from a patch of briars or a thicket may not be used by game birds. Wherever practical, the grain should be thrown under some dense clump of weeds, vines, briars or leafy tree top near a food, a brushy fence row if it connects patches of cover is an excellent place to establish a station. A corn shock that is opened up makes a good place to scatter grain, should the supply run low the unshocked corn is available. Game birds seem to sense that they are safer from enemies if cover is present. Cover is easily located by looking for tracks in the snow. Should the place be found where seed and present a station can be established providing there is sufficient cover.

Anyone that feeds birds will derive much satisfaction from seeing the birds use the stations and there are additional payments in the singing, brilliant colors, and services as weed and insect destroyers. It should also be remembered that the cover on slopes that is used by song and game birds also has another use—that of protecting soil from being destroyed by erosion. Thus, by proper management, it is possible to keep the soil from eroding and to have game and song birds which are assets to any farm.

HARDWOOD HIGHLIGHTS

By MAOL-CHOLM

BEARCATS 32; KNIGHTS 21

The W-V. Bearcats entertained the Florence Knights, in a Boone County Conference game, at the local hardwood last Friday night, and came through with a 32 to 21 win. In all due respect to the invaders, who were in the game every minute, it must be said the Cats played a lusty battle, and their score was close through most of the contest. At the half, Walton was leading 14 to 9. For the winners, O'Brien accounted for 12 points and Chapman tallied 8. Brooks was high scorer for Florence with 12 points.

In the preliminary contest, the Walton Cubs won a top-sided game from the Florence Reserves, 55 to 5 and used all players available.

WALTON TAKES THREE

FORM SIMON KENTON

Saturday night, Walton took all of her basketball players over to Simon Kenton High, and came home with all the bacon, winning three games—the mid-jets, second and first teams taking part in the evening's entertainment.

In the main go, it was a thriller until the last quarter. Throughout the first half things were about even. Simon Kenton led 7 to 6 at the close of the first quarter, and Walton was in front 11 to 10 at the half. In the third period the Cats held their foes scoreless and humped 6 points on their side of the ledger, to lead 17 to 19 at the end of this period. When the last round came up both teams fired with both barrels, and more than doubled their scores, with Walton pulling up a 37 to 21 win.

Walton's Cubs were winners over the Kenton Reserves by the score of 27 to 16.

In the curtain-raiser, the middle teams clashed, and the Walton laid started things off right for Walton by winning 16 to 9.

Not True of Life
The countless drawings and pictures that have shown soldiers and others falling backward after being shot are not true to life, says Collier's Weekly. The force of a bullet is rarely, if ever, of sufficient force to overcome the natural tendency to fall forward when dead or dying in a standing position.

"Blackbeard" Tied His

Whiskers Back of Ears

Edward Teach, who changed his occupation from privateering to the war of the Spanish succession in 1713, was known as "Blackbeard." He tied the ends of his heavy beard with ribbons and fastened them behind his ears. Several years after the signing of the treaty, he captured a large French merchantman which he christened "Queen Anne's Revenge," and converted it into a warship of 40 tons. Then he proceeded to raid the important ports on the Spanish Main, extending his activities as far north as the Carolinas.

In June, 1718, according to a writer in the Indianapolis News, "Blackbeard" sailed into Charleston harbor with a fleet of four ships, manned by a crew of 400 cutthroats, and captured ten vessels, among them a ship carrying many leading citizens to London. Not content with this, "Blackbeard" sent a landing party into the city to get supplies. Led by a mate, they carried a message to Governor John who threatened to send him the prisoners unless he fulfilled their demands. The threat, however, the pirates stripped their prisoners of all belongings, including clothing, before sending them ashore. "Blackbeard" then retired to his winter base in Ocracoke inlet, North Carolina. It has been said that Gov. Charles Eden looked upon him with suspicious indifference and even attended the wedding of the pirate to his fourteenth wife. However, the governor of Virginia displayed no such casual attitude, and sent two powerful soldiers to the command of Lieutenant Maynard to find "Blackbeard." He was finally cornered in the inlet and killed, after a long and shooting fight, the victorious Virginia forces sailed back with the severed head of "Blackbeard" on the bow of the flagship vessel.

"Blackbeard" is supposed to have buried his treasure on an island off the coast of Georgia, which since has been literally dug to pieces by treasure hunters. Of his treasure "Blackbeard" is said to have said: "Only me and the devil knows where it is, and the one who lives longest gets it."

Sun Is Much Closer In

Winter than in Summer

The sun is 3,000,000 miles closer to the earth on January 3 than it is on July 3.

The reason for this is that the sun's path around the sun is not a perfect circle, but slightly oval, and the sun is not exactly in the center.

In other words, says a writer in the Chicago Tribune, the earth's orbit is an ellipse, with the sun at one focus.

The temperature difference between summer and winter is due primarily to the fact that the sun's rays strike the earth at a more horizontal angle during the winter, due to the tilt of the earth's axis.

From an obvious geometrical relation, a given amount of solar energy is spread out over more area and each square foot of land receives proportionally less heat.

The difference in the sun's distance has a measurable effect, but not a sufficiently great one to counteract this diffusion of rays. It merely tempers slightly the seasonal variations in the northern hemisphere and accentuates them south of the equator, where the seasons are reversed.

Feed on Cellulose

Termites feed on cellulose gathered by "workers," who are protected while searching for food by "soldier" termites. Trees constitute their principal food supply, says Science Service, although termites have been found to turn to houses in the last decades because of the disappearance of the great forests that once covered North America.

Forest termites prove that they have infested this continent for fifty-five million years. Two main termite types, the subterranean and non-subterranean, are found in the United States. The former live underground and enter buildings by coming up through wooden planks or posts in contact with the earth. The non-subterranean or "dry" type is able to fly to a piece of wood and start boring wherever it lands.

Fractional Currency

During the Civil War silver and copper coins practically disappeared from circulation, causing much trouble and inconvenience, says an official of the Detroit Coin Club. Private notes, tokens, and even postage stamps were used as substitutes.

The stamps, however, were not authorized by the issuance of fractional currency, or "shipplasters." Facsimiles of postage stamps then current and portrait busts were used to illustrate these notes.

Tracing the White Indians

Definite indications that the mysterious "White Indians" of Panama are descendants of white men who came to America before Columbus are reported by an archeologist. Many scientists have held these people were albinos. But albinos usually are childless, and when they do have children they also are always albinos. But there were instances where the "White Indians" gave birth to brown-skinned children.

Tuesday morning around ten o'clock, fire destroyed Albert Clen's residence in this village, which was burned to the ground. When first noticed by citizens of Rising Sun, the two story frame building was a mass of flames at the top, toward one end of the building, as it was such a high wind at the time the fire quickly spread to the rest of the building and leaped to adjoining outbuildings which were quickly destroyed. The ferryman, Raymond Begood crossed the river hurriedly and notified the people of the burning building. Only the contents of two lower rooms were saved, all the rest being destroyed by fire.

Walton and New Haven Farmers Meet

Pasture and hay crops, tobacco hybrid corn, sheep, marketing and 4-H club work were included in the 1938 program planned by leading farmers of Walton community at a meeting held at that place recently. Local committees appointed in charge of various projects included B. W. Franks, J. L. Vest, William Ryle, Albert Parker, Jim Pennington, John C. Bedinger, Evan Hance and John Neel. The committee will be assisted by leading farmers of the entire community. Special plans were made to hold a sheep meeting in the near future and to hold a tour to outstanding tobacco curing demonstrations in Central Kentucky during the late summer.

Farmers of New Haven community held their program planning meeting January 19th. They planned for an increased acreage of alfalfa, eight demonstrations with hybrid corn, 15 lime and phosphate demonstrations, parasite control work with sheep, four farm account records and 75 4-H club members. Special committees appointed to assist in these plans are J. F. Cleek, George Kearns, John Conley, S. B. Sleet, Mrs. Walter Ferguson, A. B. Moore, W. B. Gatewood and O. E. Senour.

850 Boone Heds Tested For Bang's Disease. Eight hundred and fifty Boone County heds including 8,803 cattle have been tested for Bang's disease since the starting of Federal testing work July 1, 1934 according to reports of W. F. Biles, Inspector in charge of Bang's disease elimination work in the state.

The above figures represent splendid progress of this work in Boone County. The 1935 census gives 1246 farms with 11,812 cattle in the county. This would give approximately 70% of the herds and 75% of the cattle that have been tested and reactors eliminated from the herds. When it is considered that there are a number of beef cattle and heifers under six months of age that would not likely be included in this test, it might conservatively be estimated that 90% of the dairy cattle have been tested.

It is only a matter of time until the Bang's disease test will be required the same as the T. B. test. This has already happened in many areas. Health departments are more and more frequently tracing undulant fever and other intestinal troubles to Bang's disease organisms.

The above report represents the splendid work that has been done by Dr. Kenneth Ryle, veterinarian in Burlington who is in charge of the testing work in the county. Several communities in the county hope to have 100% of their herds tested free from this disease this year. All research work shows that cows free from the disease return a greater profit. Farmers are urged to take advantage of the testing work while the Federal government bears all expenses and pays for reactors in the herds.

"Picketing" Was Torture

Twenty-six soldiers of the United States army were placed on trial in Chillicothe, Ohio, in 1814 on charges of desertion. Five were sentenced to be shot, while most of the others were ordered "picketed," which meant they must stand with their bare heels resting on a sharp pointed stick that stuck up from the ground.

"White Pheasants" Hybrids
"White pheasants," sometimes described by farmers, are hybrid birds, a cross between a pheasant and bantam fowl.

Ice Cream Pie Is Excellent Lesson in Refrigeration

By ROBERT D. POTTER

New York.—Some of you may have had this air conditioned, or so-called ice cream, that is going around. You bake the lower crust of a pie, let it cool, fill with ice cream, put meringue on top and toast the meringue in the oven until brown. Your guests are properly bewildered and appreciative to find the ice cream inside still hard when they eat it.

Their amazement comes from a lack of understanding of heat insulation, air conditioning requirements and similar profound topics which you, as the pie fabricator, can check off on your fingers.

Meringue Acts Like Cork

The meringue, you point out, of course, consists of just about nothing except bubbles of air with walls of egg white. And the same properties which give cork its grand insulation qualities in preventing the passage of heat enable the meringue to keep the ice cream from melting during its brief visit to the hot oven.

No one has perhaps figured out the size of a bubble of air in meringue. But the cork contains about one one-thousandth of an inch in diameter and some 200,000,000 of them would be needed to make up a cubic inch. Each cell of cork contains air and heat has great difficulty in passing through even a small thickness of them.

Not All Cork From Spain

Thus while your guests are eating their air conditioned, ice cream pie and the topic of conversation has naturally turned to cork you may add that despite the war in Spain the supply of cork is not greatly affected. Some of them may not know that the bark of a certain species of live oak tree, that we call cork, is produced in much greater quantities in Portugal than it is in Spain. And that as much or more than is produced in Spain comes from Italy, France and North Africa.

Last year's Spanish harvest of cork (technically it is known as the "strip") was naturally decreased by the civil war, but world markets have not yet been affected.

Hormone Induced A Rat to Mother Young Squab

New York.—The spectacle of a healthy, grown-up female rat cherishing and mothering a tender young squab, just because a few drops of a hormone from the pituitary gland had been injected into the rat's body, was described by Prof. Charles R. Stockard of Cornell university medical college at a meeting of the New York Academy of Medicine.

Professor Stockard used this phenomenon, discovered by Dr. Oscar Riddle of the Carnegie institution of Washington's laboratories at Cold Spring Harbor, to illustrate the powerful influence that hormones or gland secretions may exert on the body of man and other animals. The rat he talked about was a perfectly normal rat that ordinarily would have made a prompt meal of the tender meat of the squab. The only difference in this particular rat was the few drops of hormone.

Hormones have other effects on the body. Together with the nervous system and brain, they are responsible for all the different parts and mechanisms of the body working together as a whole. Hormones and nerves, moreover, depend on each other. Nerves stimulate glands to secrete hormones and hormones stimulate nerves to control muscles, even in such simple movements as those involved in walking and talking. Which of the two is more important may be surmised from the fact that hormone control is an older and more primitive method of integration than the nervous mechanism. Plants, for example, do not have anything like nerves, but they do produce hormones for controlling and integrating life processes. One of these, a growth-producing hormone, has actually been isolated from the growing tips of young plants.

Crop Failures Reason for Deserted Pueblos

St. Paul, Minn.—Deserted Indian villages, pueblos in silent ruin, might have warned many an American farmer not to try his luck in the treacherous dust bowl areas in our western plains.

This is the vital lesson from America's past, which science is beginning to uncover, and which may help avert future farm tragedies. Reporting to the Journal Science an investigation of many Pueblo Indian ruins in the western Great Plains, Max C. Markley, biochemist of this city, declares that crop failures, not marauding enemies, apparently drove Indians from these valley farms.

His discoveries in New Mexico uphold the recently advanced theory of Dr. W. H. Wedel of the Smithsonian institution, that drought routed Indian farmers in regions of Kansas and Nebraska.

Smoke Descends Slowly

Though Denser Than Air

Smoke consists of myriads of small solid particles suspended in the air. These particles are denser than air, yet they settle only with extreme slowness because of two factors, writes Dr. Thomas M. Beck in the Chicago Tribune.

A falling body soon reaches a speed at which its weight is balanced by the air resistance opposing its motion. This resistance is roughly proportional to the amount of surface exposed, and the smaller the body, the greater the ratio of surface to weight and the slower its rate of fall through the air.

Smoke particles usually are so small that their rates of fall hardly causes them to pick up electrical charges, and the mutual repulsion of these charges prevents the particles from coalescing into larger particles which would fall more quickly.

It is a surprising fact that these smoke particles are much larger than the air they are suspended in. It is a surprising fact that these smoke particles are much larger than the air they are suspended in. It is a surprising fact that these smoke particles are much larger than the air they are suspended in.

The reason for this difference lies in the fact that the small, light gas molecules are in a state of constant motion, and travel at incredible speeds which quickly bring them into contact with the absorbing material. On the other hand the far heavier smoke particles drift very slowly through the rest of the gas, and only a few of them have time to reach the absorbent.

All Plants Depend Upon Leaves to Produce Food

Plant leaves form a direct link between nature's storehouses of food elements and the food requirements of plant and animal life. All animals are dependent on plants either directly or indirectly for their food, and plants depend upon their leaves to make food out of raw materials.

Plants make many uses of the products they manufacture, the uses varying greatly with the kind of plant. The foods may be made into wood, gums, resins, flowers, fruits, or seeds. They may be stored away as starches or sugars to serve some future need of the plant or to be used in the growth of new plants.

Ten chemical elements are required by plants in this process, notes a writer in the Chicago Tribune. They are carbon, oxygen, hydrogen, nitrogen, calcium, sulphur, iron, potassium, phosphorus, and magnesium. A few others usually are found, but most plants seem to grow without them. Nature makes ample provision for the two that come from the air—carbon and oxygen. Soils often are deficient in nitrogen, phosphorus, and potassium, and sometimes calcium and sulphur. These are added to the soil in fertilizers.

War Photography in 1847

Contrary to general knowledge, Matthew Brady, famous photographer of the Civil war, was not the first man to make war pictures, but the credit in this regard really belongs to an unusual and unknown hero (or heroes) who took pictures of the Mexican war in 1847. The pictures were taken by the daguerreotype process and show American cavalrymen under General John Ellis Wool and a group of American infantry from a Virginia regiment on the Calle Real, a road through Mexico. The group, which includes scenes other than those of the Mexican war, comprises twelve daguerreotypes and belongs to the Yonkers (N. Y.) Museum of Science and Arts.—Scientific American.

Macaroni Process a Secret

Naples was the center of macaroni manufacture for so many years that the Pompeian road leading into it was broken to bits by the continuous procession of wagons and trucks hauling in hard wheat and flour, says "The European Cookbook for American Homes." The process for making macaroni was kept secret until the Fourteenth century, when a Frenchman got hold of it and took it back to France with him.

Cockney, Dialect Used in London

Cockney is a dialect used in London. In cockney pronunciation, "daily" becomes "dily," "about" sounds like "ahout" and "thing" is "fngi." The word, cockney, comes from coken-ey, middle English for cock's egg—a small, malformed, yolkeless egg supposed to have been laid by a cock. The word next was applied to "spoiled" boys and girls, later to city "sissies," and still later to all Londoners and the way they talk.

Doulton Ware

Doulton ware was non-existent in the early years of the Nineteenth century. The pottery works were established by John Doulton at Vauxhall in 1815. It was afterward carried on by Doulton and Watts, who some years later transferred to High street, Lambeth, England. The application of art to pottery by the Doulton company began in 1870, and during succeeding years this art was gradually perfected.

Oysters in New Guise

By BEULAH V. GILLASPIE
Director, Sealest Laboratory Kitchen

COLD days suggest oysters—and most everyone loves oysters in some guise. We've found that creamed, in combination with eggs, they're such a tempting dish as to delight the most demanding. A savory recipe for your bridges, luncheons or suppers—also satisfying as a main dish for any meal.

CREAMED OYSTERS AND EGGS

1 small loaf bread
Soft butter
4 tablespoons flour
1 1/2 cups milk
1/2 teaspoon salt

Few grains pepper
1 dozen large oysters
1/2 cup oyster liquor
6 hard cooked eggs

Cut off the top, sides and ends of the bread. Place on a baking sheet, spread with soft butter and cut into 12 sections, not cutting quite through to the bottom. Bake in a moderately hot oven (375° F.) for 15 to 20 minutes or until crisp and brown. Melt 4 tablespoons of the butter in a double boiler, add flour and mix well. Add milk gradually and cook, stirring constantly, until thickened. Add salt and pepper. Cook the oysters in the 1/2 cup of oyster liquor until plump and edges curled. Add oysters, oyster liquor and the sliced hard cooked eggs to the cream sauce. Reheat. Place toasted loaf of bread on a platter and pour over the oyster and egg mixture.

JACK OF ALL TRADES

MORTON BOWE

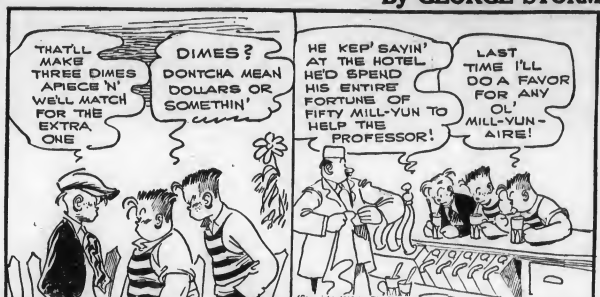

Sculptor, printer, wood carver, cabinet maker and photographer are some of the hobbies and avocations of Morton Bowe, popular radio tenor, who is started as a soloist on Columbia's new Sunday edition of the "Helix Magazine of the Air" hear from 5:00 to 5:30 p. m. EST.

While Morton's success was reached in a roundabout way it is evident that he did no mooning around while getting there. Starting as a choir boy, the singer realized his ambition to be a church soloist at the age of twelve. But his saddest moment came during the world war when his voice changed and he was unable to sing for some time.

It was then that Bowe turned to the printing trade as a linotype operator on a Boston newspaper and finally with the return of his voice worked his way through the New England Conservatory of Music, during this time he also served as a wood carver and apprenticed sculptor.

Later Bowe joined a Broadway quartet and toured for two years with vaudeville units and stage plays. Since entering the radio field seven years ago he has risen to popularity as one of radio's foremost soloists.

NEWS FROM THE SOCIAL SECURITY BOARD

"There is no change in the employee-employer contribution rate for old-age insurance under the social security act," it was said today by Mr. Frank B. Decker, Jr., acting manager of the Covington, Ky., field office of this federal government agency.

"Recently many inquiries have come to our office as to the 1938 contribution rate under the old-age insurance plan," Mr. Decker added. "In some instances in Region V, of which this social security office is a part, it has been reported that employers are now deducting two percent from the wages of their workers, for old-age insurance."

"This is in error as the contribution rate remains at one percent throughout 1938 and 1939. Both the employee and the employer are required to contribute one percent of wages which are covered by the social security act. The confusion probably is the result of new contribution rates now in effect under state unemployment compensation laws," Mr. Decker added.

"As the social security act now stands, the contributions for old-age insurance increase one-half of one percent, for both employee and employer, every three years. Starting in 1940 the rate will be 1½ percent; but there will be no change until that time as the law now stands," Mr. Decker said.

"All contributions under old-age insurance are paid to the United States Collector of Internal Revenue at Louisville, Ky. The contributions for the first three months of 1938 are due not later than the last day of April. An informational report of contributions showing the names and amounts for individuals also is required at that time," Mr. Decker said.

So far more than 4,500,000 social security account numbers have been issued in Region V, with includes the states of Ohio, Michigan and Kentucky. The Covington office which covers the counties of Kenton, Campbell, Boone, Bracken, Grant, Gallatin and Pendleton, is a district in which it is estimated that more than 2,300 account numbers have been issued to date.

Mrs. Dwight Weber left Friday for her home in Detroit, Mich., after a visit with her relatives. Mr. and Mrs. E. F. Vallandingham and Lynn Percival, in Kenton County.

Mrs. H. A. Alister of Dayton, O. and her mother, Mrs. Powers, came to visit Mrs. Bess Conrad and family, Wednesday. Mrs. Alister returned Friday, but Mrs. Powers remained for a longer visit.

Erosion Control

Practices To Be Used By Boone and Kenton County Farmers

It's a bit early to plow the fields for this year's crops, but many Boone and Kenton county farmers are eyeing the calendar, because for the first time they are planning to use erosion control practices.

That's the word from Ward T. Darnell, superintendent of CCC Camp 508-S-Ky., Walton, who reports that 1938 brings with it a new group of erosion-conscious farmers in this community. The reason for this change in tillage style, Mr. Darnell says, is that hundreds of farmers visited the camp area during 1937.

"Remember that the work of the camp is demonstrational," he pointed out. "On these visits they saw entire farms with all row crops or the contour. They saw steep hillsides with strips of erosion-resistant crops alternated with strips of clean-tilled row crops. And they saw long slopes with a combination of erosion control practices in operation—including strip cropping and contour farming."

Conservation of moisture as well as soil is partly responsible for this increased interest in erosion control practices, Mr. Darnell explained. The level rows hold more water on the land where it first falls thereby promoting plant growth and, incidentally, reducing flood hazards.

According to present observations many farmers will retire badly eroded land from cultivation and plant it to trees, grass, or other soil-binding vegetation. Gully control, use of cover crops, fire prevention, and pasture management, are other practices which are being inaugurated by Boone and Kenton county farmers in the interest of soil and moisture conservation.

Account Card Holders

Asked To Correct Their Old-Age Insurance Records

Brides of 1937-38 who obtained social security account cards before they were married were requested by Frank B. Decker, Jr., Acting Manager of the Covington, Ky., field office of the Social Security Board to send in their new names to prevent confusion in the keeping of their wage accounts for Federal old-age insurance.

A card for this purpose, designated as "Employee's Request for Change in Records" is now available at the Covington office of the Social Security Board located at 414 Copple Building or at any one of the Board's 322 other field offices located in strategic centers.

This card provides space both for the newly acquired name and the used in applying for an account number. Corrected account number cards will be sent to those who report their change of name.

Mr. Decker explained that since wage accounts are kept in the name the worker gives the employer, individuals who change their legal names should correct their records to insure the accurate recording of their wages. Wage information reported by employers and transmitted to the Social Security Board indicate that many employees have gone to work on new jobs under their new names without notifying the Board of the change. This, Mr. Decker explained, complicates the keeping of their accounts and might make it difficult to ascertain the full amount of the benefits to which they will ultimately be entitled.

Social Security account card holders may use this new application form also to correct mis-statements as to age, address, or any other inaccurate declarations that may have been made.

Mr. Decker stated that while the Board would accept without question a new age declaration, the acceptance should not be regarded as final since an employee may be called upon to furnish proof of age on filing a benefit claim.

By making available the how card the Board believes that thousands of persons who have neglected to correct their records will now take advantage of this simplified procedure.

Mr. and Mrs. Clayton Percival, accompanied by Mrs. Belle Gordon of Walton, motored to Huntington, W. Va., Saturday, where they were the guests of Mrs. Percival's daughter, Miss Lottie Percival, and her sister, Miss Jessie Rouse; also Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Rouse and family.

Leslie Jones was here to attend the funeral of his uncle, W. M. Whitson, at Verona, Saturday.

Marvin Hudson, Jr. left here Sunday afternoon for Cincinnati, where he boarded a train for Tulsa, Okla., on a business trip, expecting to return in about two weeks.

AFTER THOUGHTS

By GEORGE

The weather is about to get us this week. We have a bad case of spring fever. The weather is just an excuse, as we have the same thing the year around.

A large turnout at the Fire meeting Monday night. The citizens of our town should feel proud of their Department, and give them all the cooperation possible. They need some more furniture to finish furnishing the new Recreation room. Any old furniture that has out-lived its usefulness and you would like to get rid of it—just tell any fireman and he will take it off your hands and be glad to do so.

The management of Stephens Restaurant wishes to quell a rumor to the effect that there would be no loafing there. This statement is false and you will be welcome any time you happen in, whether you stay two minutes or two hours.

This time of year must create a lot of unrest. After looking at a public sale and auction ads this week in our columns, you too will think so.

Ward Rice, our mail carrier, is basking in the Florida sunshine at this writing and we hope he is catching a lot of fish.

Our friend and your friend, Charlie McCarthy, has been voted the outstanding program of the year on the radio. We think of him as a person, he is so real, but we would like to hear him and Edgar Bergen sing a duet.

A good politician and office holder is just like a thorough race horse—it's just one race after another.

Don't forget to attend the Valentine dance to be given by the Young Men's Democratic Club at Koehn's Club House, Saturday night. The money derived from these affairs is put to some useful purpose. So come out and do your part. According to the committee a delightful evening is in store for all who attend.

Stolen Car Recovered by Walton Police! Yes, these fellows are doing a good job of law enforcing in our fair city.

It is learned that Judge J. B. Doan has resigned as Police Judge of our town and as yet no successor has been appointed.

The men's fashions call for colors in 1938. If you see a male walking down the street with a green suit with a blue derby atop his pate and a maroon topcoat on, don't be alarmed, for colors are going to be prominent. This will let some men show true colors—there are about 90 to choose from.

Cigarette sales greater in 1937 than in 1936. This should make the farmer feel better and wish more were smoked.

Congrats to the new Fire Chief D. Hess Vest, and all of the newly elected officers. May their tasks be easier than their predecessors.

NEW HAVEN HOMEMAKERS

On Friday morning, February 18 at 10:30 o'clock, at the home of the County President of the Homemakers Clubs, Mrs. Sam Sleet, the members of the New Haven Homemakers will convene for the second meeting of the year. As this is the little season, the members having completed the project assigned for the beginning of the term and having not decided on the plans for the season ahead, the leaders, Mrs. Jack Cleek and Mrs. John Taylor, will present interesting bits of needlework with directions for the making of these pieces.

This is to be an all day meeting at the request of the membership, who have enjoyed so much, their day-off from monotonous winter confinement.

HARDWOOD HIGHLIGHTS

WALTON WINS CLOSE GAME FROM NEW HAVEN

At the Bearcat fair, Friday night the Cats played the New Haven hoopsmen and it proved to be quite a close and exciting contest, with the locals rallying in the final quarter, to win 30 to 25. The Bearcats jumped into the lead soon after the opening whistle and were coasting along with a 20 to 13 advantage at the half. In the third period the Tigers began sneaking up on our Cats and at the end of the quarter the score was knotted at 22-22. At the start of the final stanza the invaders took a two-point lead. However, soon after, Walton tied the count and then went on to win 30 to 25.

Osborn continued to lead in Walton's offense, and rang up 15 points and Chapman was next in line with 7. For New Haven, Griffith was high scorer with 11 points.

The preliminary game was won by the W. V. Clubs, 22 to 12. The strength of the Bearcats has been increased materially by the acquisition of two men at the beginning of this semester. They are Charles Benson of Burlington, and Lawrence Kendall of Campbellburg. Both of these boys were regulars on their respective teams before coming to Walton, and they should prove a great asset to the team.

Morgan Here Friday

On Friday night, Feb. 11th, the Morgan basketballers from Pendleton County, come to Walton, and the locals will be looking for revenge. The Cats played their first game of the season at Morgan and took a first class trimming. The boys hope to reverse things this time.

The Willford farm on the Ryle and South Fork road, about 4 miles from Verona, will be sold at auction, Saturday, Feb. 12th, by the R. G. Kinman Auction Co. of Covington. This farm has been in the Willford family for approximately 150 years and is considered one of the best stock and tobacco farms in this section. It has been well taken care of and has plenty of water and timber. Attend and bid your judgment!

This is the fourth annual stockholders' meeting of the Northern Kentucky Production Credit Association, which was organized in the spring of 1934 and since has extended $487,955.00 in credit to its members for farm operating purposes.

The directors urge that every member be present and exercise their voting privilege in selecting the management of the organization, for the coming year. Active participation by stockholders is essential to the permanence and good management of the organization. Voting is on the basis of one member one vote, giving an equal voice to each member, regardless of the number of shares owned.

THE BLACKSMITH SHOP

As the horse is becoming less and less important, the blacksmith shop so intimately connected with horses is becoming rare. There was a time when the shop shared with the general store the honor of being a loafers' joint. Obviously the people who gathered at the blacksmith shop had come on business, but one was in no hurry to get his work done and leave the fascinating conversation that was always going on.

The blacksmith shop had its own peculiar odor. The coal used in the forge was a semi-powdered, vile-smelling stuff that made a heavy smoke. Soon the whole building was saturated with this odor and the smell of horses' hoofs. This odor was as distinctive for the shop as the odor of the smokehouse or the livery stable. No one seemed to mind it and probably was not aware of it.

The blacksmith was a man-of-all-work. His stock in trade was, of course, shoeing horses and welding iron; hence his name. There was still, a generation ago, something of the mediaeval wonder at the blacksmith's art; not everyone could weld iron or do the many other skillful things that the blacksmith found a part of his work.

Most blacksmiths were pretty fair cabinet makers and could repair or even make any of the furniture in the average home. Making V harrows was just an ordinary part of the art of working iron. Our Fidelity smith also ran a grist mill on certain days so that his shop could turn out nearly everything not grown on the farm or bought at the general store.

The small boy who went along with an older brother or his father to the shop was sometimes allowed the privilege of working the bellows

How big he felt as the horseshoe or bit of iron became red and then nearly white with heat, while the flames danced among the clinders! Then the sport continued with the blacksmith's hammering on the hot metal, while the sparks flew in all directions, sometimes falling on bare feet. How the iron sizzled when it was dropped into a tub of water to temper it!

All blacksmiths could "tickle the anvil," that is, add a lot of grace notes by striking the anvil between beats on the iron being hammered. Nothing sounded any more like music of the numerous noises associated with old-fashioned ways of working. If one had not developed this form of skill, he was still regarded as an amateur.

Our blacksmith was a sort of philosopher. I suppose that his daily association with horses and mules gave him a goodly portion of horse sense that we all admire, whether it is borne by man or beast. He had the rare gift of laughter. Many a man would have cursed man and earth for what he had done to his lot in life, but he laughed his way little giggle and went ahead. When political or religious prejudice got others in a stew, the blacksmith laughed again, often clearing the atmosphere for the rest of us.

On Sunday morning at the country church, when some fine point of theology was about to disrupt the community, again he laughed, making the case of the brethren feel sheepish for such outbursts of fervor (another name for temper). Who knows but that the philosophy of the towler at the forge was just what we all needed? For some reason I remember this simple smith and how he forgotten many another person who owned more and had more notice.

Again the Grim Reaper of Death visited our community and took out of to-day's sin and sadness into a blissful tomorrow, one of our most highly respected citizens, Mrs. Lizzie Jennings Moore, wife of William Moore, Sr., deceased. Aunt Lizzie as she was lovingly called by her legion of friends had almost reached 89th mile stone along life's highway. She was united in marriage to Wm. Moore, Sr., early in young womanhood, and they walked hand in hand down the long avenues of life together, until the devoted companion was called to the Great Beyond. Then she turned and leaned on the arm of a devoted son, William, with whom she lived down through the years until she too was called and gathered the drapery of her couch about her and laid down to pleasant dreams. To this union was born four children, Leonard of Stamping Ground, Wm., Mrs. Parra Connover and Mrs. Joe Wilson, all of Owen County. There remains to mourn the loss, two sons, two daughters, six grandchildren, two brothers and a number of nieces and nephews, besides a legion of friends who also mourn the loss of this good and sainted woman, for of much is the foundation of human society, the old fashioned mother of a bygone day.

unselfish, unassuming, self-sacrificing and Godley, are a few of those noble traits of character possessed by Aunt Lizzie. Death has no terror for this christian soul. It is not that end but the beginning of life, not the destroyer but the restorer of our rights which puts us in possession of our eternal rights in Heaven. Funerals were conducted from the Sparta Christian Church, where she was a member, by Rev. W. J. Clarke, interment in Owen Cemetery. The entire community extends their heartfelt sympathy to the grief stricken family.

ATWOOD-NICHOLSON HOMEMAKERS MEET

The Atwood-Nicholson Homemakers met for an all day meeting at the home of Mrs. Frank Cook on Wednesday, Feb. 2nd. In the absence of Mrs. E. F. Vallandigham the president, Mrs. Ira Stephens presided, calling the meeting to order promptly at 11 a. m. Mrs. Clifford Northcutt, secretary, gave the treasurer's report, and roll call. The following members responded: Mrs. Atwood Bird, Mrs. W. R. Stephens, Mrs. L. G. Cummings, Mrs. Ira Stephens, Mrs. Lloyd Bird, Mrs. Wm. Meier, Mrs. Stephen Durr, Mrs. Clayton Percival, Mrs. Ira Stephens, Mrs. Zella Byerly, Mrs. Van H. Weaver and the hostesses, Mrs. Frank Cook. Each member, when called, gave a useful household hint. The meeting adjourned for the serving of the delicious luncheon which was served from the gaily decorated dining table, and small tables nearby. At each place was a gay little red and gold valentine basket bearing a name card and filled with valentine candies. The center piece was of a low pottery bowl of bright yellow filled with lovely cut flowers of bright matching yellow, and green leaves. Mrs. Van H. Weaver presided at either end of the table, assisting the hostess with the duties of the day. Mrs. Clifford Northcutt, Mrs. L. G. Cummings and Mrs. R. K. Hand.

Directly after luncheon, games were enjoyed for thirty minutes, clues cards being acted by each member from parts prepared for them by the hostess. The high light of interest was the talk given by Mrs. Ira Stephens about the Homemakers Convention recently held in Lexington. Of special interest was her description of the tea given by Mr. and Mrs. Frank McVey with Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt as honor guest, and the interesting luncheon at the Phoenix Hotel, followed by the banquet in the Rose Room of the Lafayette Hotel.

Mrs. Clifford Northcutt and Mrs. L. G. Cummings, project leaders read papers of interest to every Homemaker, "Good Illumination for the Farm Home." Various lights and shades shown by Miss Byerly were much admired and talked about. These included shades for sewing, reading and better kitchen lighting. General discussion followed on topics of the day.

Mrs. Roulie Hume will be the hostess for the next meeting, March 2nd. This meeting will not be an all day one, being called for twelve-thirty to four. A good thought for each Homemaker is one of Benjamin Franklin's, "A quarrelsome man is without neighbors."

After refreshments of cake and hot chocolate were served by the hostess and her sister, Mrs. Ross Kite, the gifts were unwrapped by the bride and displayed, with a polite, "thank you" by the groom. This method of appreciation was suggested as the groom knew each individual and they were all strangers to the bride. At a late hour, all left for their respective homes, thanking the host and hostess for a grand evening of enjoyment and offering hearty congratulations to the bride and groom.

NEW HAVEN

PARENT-TEACHERS MEET

To what ends the members of the New Haven P-T. A. will go to double a quarter were reported at the second meeting of the new year which was held at the school last Tuesday evening. A faculty member bargained with her mother to see the lining in the coat of her husband, charging said husband the sum of fifty cents, thereby giving the mother half. The mother realizing the ambition of her daughter donated her part of the bargain. A bushel of turnips, which during the time between last September and the afternoon of the meeting had been doing in a mound on the south pasture of one of the member's farm woke up last week to find themselves in the home of a county superintendent and school principal. Two of the star basketball players of the Mothers team were seen submitting two portions of these turnips, the payments all being turned into the treasury.

The important business of the meeting was the payment of the debt for the students piano. The membership wishes to extend their appreciation to all those who attended the recent basketball games, as it was through their efforts, this payment was possible.

Superintendent J. H. Norris was a guest at this meeting and gave a short address on the School Taxes. A group of selected Sixth Grade students presented an illustrated lecture on the Commonwealth of Kentucky, using a map which was made by the class. This map being made of bleached sheeting with the various points of interest to be found in the State, drawn with crayons. The replica of the theme of Stephen Collins Foster's immortal song, received much comment.

Mrs. Austin Gschwind, Vice President of the Association, presided at the meeting as Mrs. Harry Moore President, is at the General Assembly at Frankfort.

1932 ACP Survey Made
The Boone County Agricultural Conservation Association is completing a survey of all farms that have not been listed in the 1932 or 1931 programs. The survey must be completed before the 1932 goals can be set up for individual farms.

The Boone County ACP Board of Directors met at Burlington last Friday to complete plans for the survey which will be conducted by a local committee. H. E. Forkner, president of the County Association, presided Monday and Tuesday of this week assisting the county office in completing a list of all farms in the county for committee's use.

Farmers who were not in the 1932 or 1931 program are urged to render their full support in completing the survey. The survey asks for the listing of the principal crops grown the past two years and involves in no way a sign up on the part of the farmer. Figures are available on the various crops for the entire county. The survey must be completed in order that there may be a more equitable distribution of bases Full cooperation in the survey will not only assist local committee but will reduce the costs which must be borne by the local association.

"That's wonderful!" he said, emerging from her embrace at last, "but you don't need to lay so much stress on that mortgage. Don't you know I'm figuring to go out there and spend all my summers, and sometimes get there in the winter also."

Then he caught her in his arms again and drew her close.

"My darling! My little Christmas bride!" he whispered. "Oh, God has been good, good to me! I can never thank Him enough."

There were busy days for the next three weeks for both Greg and Margaret.

Greg came breezing in every morning for a few minutes, as if he knew just when he was most needed.

Then every day sooner or later he would give a quiet signal to Margaret and she would presently come down with her hat and coat on and they would hurry away together. Sometimes to the home to measure for new curtains for some room that didn't have the kind of curtains that pleased them. Sometimes to the store to purchase something for their Christmas plans.

Mrs. Harris found a middle-aged woman who had made it her business to go out doing housecleaning, bringing two able and trustworthy helpers with her. These were put into the house to clean and the work went forward with remarkable rapidity.

"We shall need to be hunting up some servants, I suppose," said Greg one day, looking around on the spotlessness with satisfied eyes.

"Oh, no, not yet, anyway," protested Margaret. "We don't want to have time to give to our guests."

"Yes, but this is a very big place to keep clean, and if you spend all your time in cooking where will there be any left to have good food for the guests?"

"And especially at Christmas we want plenty of good times. I'll admit it's more homelike without a lot of servants, but we want to have time to give to our guests. Besides, we want our grandmother to have a good rest and not have to work hard."

"You are dear!" she remarked irrelevantly.

So gradually with the help of Mrs. Harris, who knew many trained workers of various kinds, they worked out their problems together. "We're not going to have a fashionable rich family," smiled Margaret, "we're going to be a real family with a home and a home life. We don't have to do as the world does. Even though we have a mansion, we have a home, we don't have to live in the manners and customs of the fashionable world."

"I should say not!" said Greg contentedly. Then he suddenly stopped and drew Margaret into his arms and kissed her.

Greg had planned that one charming wing of the big beautiful house should be set apart for the grandparents, whether they would consent to spend their time in it or not. He said they should make their home with them, if they would, and then in summer they could go back to the farmhouse on the mountain, maybe sometimes in winter, too, just to have a good time together. How Margaret's heart leaped with joy at the idea!

By this time Margaret was wearing a beautiful clear diamond like a drop of dew on the third finger of her left hand.

At last the house stood shining and ready. Mrs. Harris had offered her services to get dinner ready for them the night they should return from Vermont. There seemed to be nothing more to be arranged for a happy homecoming and a joyous time at Christmas. They had even found the children for a Christmas party, children from a forlorn little country orphanage.

So the morning dawned that they had set for their return to Vermont, and Margaret came down very early. Greg was already in the office awaiting her, having been invited to breakfast.

They did full justice to Mrs. Harris' breakfast this time, and then Margaret hurried to the office to get her coat. But Greg followed her, came up behind her, took her in his arms, her hand and arm, she turned and reached out her arm to put it in the sleeve but the lining did not feel familiar. It was soft, slippery satin, instead of the duck of her own coat, and as he folded it about her and whirled her around to fasten it, she suddenly saw Mrs. Harris and Jane standing in the doorway. Something in their around and grinned at them both.

"Oh, boy! I'm glad I've got a family!" he said joyfully on the ground when they reached Greg's home city but there were signs of its soon coming in the lowering clouds as Greg turned the car into the driveway and swept up to the house.

The night was coming down and lights were twinkling from many windows as Grandmother looked out from the east.

"Is this a hotel?" she asked as the car stopped under the portico.

"No, dearest!" said Margaret. "This is home. It's the house that Greg has bought for us all to live in."

"But I don't understand," said Grandmother.

"You don't have to now, dearest," said Margaret, taking the hand that Greg held out to help her and springing lightly to the pavement. "We'll explain it all to you afterward. Come now into the house and see how pretty it is, and how home-like."

The days preceding Christmas were filled with delightful bustle and excitement, into which, after a day's rest, the two old people entered heartily, fully persuaded that this time they were about to acquire the finest grandson-in-law that lived on earth.

There were still presents to be put up with tissue paper and ribbons, and cards, and Grandmother just loved it all. She got some paper and ribbon for her own little gifts which she had selected so carefully from her storehouse of the years.

Early in Christmas week Rhoderick Steele and his bride arrived and became at once a part of the harmonious family, entering into all the plans.

Mrs. Prentiss, the woman who did the cleaning, was on hand with her helpers as the festive day arrived. "Well, I did it! I got Grandmother a plain wool dress, and some new collars and cuffs. I didn't dare get too much lest she would think it was going to be grand for her and would work out of going, thought when we got there I could get her the things she needed."

"That's right," said Greg, but there was a hidden twinkle in his eyes that belied his close-shorn hair. Greg had brought another big hamper along but there was no turkey this time, instead there were chops and beefsteak and everyday things that hungry people would like. There were also several big boxes and packages in the back seat.

"Do you realize, young lady, that this is really our wedding trip?" he asked when they had traversed the lonely early morning streets of the city, inhabited only by milk carts and bread wagons, and were finally out on the smooth highway.

"Oh, it is, isn't it?" said Margaret, slipping her hand inside his arm and squeezing it close. "Oh, I'm so happy, Greg, I'm so happy."

He leaned over and kissed her radiant face.

They came into the region of snow presently, hard glittering deep snow that had already settled down to stay and make a bed rock creaking sound for tires. Greg stopped and put on the chains, and he, too, was increasingly difficult to drive without them. And then suddenly they were at the farm and being welcomed by the old couple, eager and lovely. Grandmother, taking Greg in her arms as if he had been her own son.

No, they didn't know yet, Margaret hadn't told them. They were to see the pleasure of being there to see their faces. And so when the welcomes had been said and they came within the wide old kitchen, lighted now by many lamps all shining ready for an illumination when they should arrive. Margaret took Greg's hand and stood beside him.

"I love me," Grandmother said, she said with a lovely glow over her face and her eyes started bright.

"No," said Grandmother with a light of satisfaction on her face. "No, it isn't wonderful, but it's beautiful 'I'm glad!' and she said it in a tone of great relief, as if she had been so afraid he wouldn't."

Breathlessly as the days went by they enjoyed every precious moment, meanwhile working along with the old people to help get the house ready for hibernating, and to help them get ready for the journey.

"Costs!" said Margaret as she tilted the door for the last time and went over the path to see what was going on. And then her face blazed into brightness that vied with the glint of the rising sun from behind the heavy snowy clouds in the east.

For Margaret suddenly understood, and she paused to breathe.

"Oh, you precious!" as she brushed past Greg.

The two old people enjoyed every minute of the way and did not seem to be in the least tired. They seemed to be in their pleasure didn't express itself vocally as they turned and they were eating the doughnuts Margaret slipped quietly away, and as they all came out from the dining room she came down the stairs attired in white. She was carrying a great armful of white roses and smiling at Greg, who stood at the foot of the stairs looking up.

Everybody had a present for everybody else. Suddenly breakfast seemed desirable, and they went gaily to the dining room, where there were sausages and buckwheat cakes, coffee and a great pan of sugary doughnuts.

Later, when at last Greg and Margaret went to their own apartment, he gathered her into his arms tenderly and looked deep into her eyes.

"And to think," he said sorrowfully, "that I used to believe I cared for Alice! Oh, God has been gracious to give you to me! My precious Christmas gift!"

Odors Easily Detected

No sense is so sensitive as the sense of smell, according to Dr. Ivor Griffith, writing in the American Journal of Pharmacy, publication of the Philadelphia College of Pharmacy and Science. He says camphor can be detected in a dilution of one part in 400,000; musk in 1,000,000; and vanilla in 10,000,000. A good smeller can detect one billionth of an ounce of star of roses and one trillionth of an ounce of ethyl mercaptan (rotten egg odor).

AFTER THOUGHTS

By GEORGE

At least we escaped this St. Valentine's Day without getting a comic one. I heard one person say that to receive one made them mad, as it some times got too close home and showed up some faults they didn't about being reminded of.

Attended the dance given by the Young Men's Democratic Club of Boone County, Saturday night, and was surprised at the large turnout. It was one of the largest crowds this writer has ever seen at any of the previous dances. Congratulations to the different committees—they got fine results.

The newspaper field lost one of the most likeable columnists in the country in the sudden death of O. O. McIntyre. He was the proverbial country boy that made good in the biggest of big cities. He was one of Ohio's foremost sons, and worked on the Cincinnati Post before going to New York, where he found success.

The Bearcats king of turned on the heat, against the Morgan High Raiders and the Hamilton Farmers' the past week. The trouncing given the Raiders avenged a defeat handed them in the first game of the season.

We have been wondering if the co-leaders of the Boone County Conference, Hebron and Walton, will play off the tie before or after the District tournament. It looks as if it would be better to wait until after the tournament and then have the play-off. It would make a better tournament, we think.

We received a card from our vacationing letter carrier, this week who is spending his time trying to catch fish in Florida. At least we are not completely forgotten about.

All of you readers who like to read good western stories, be sure and read "To Ride the Range With," the new serial starting in next week's issue.

In this issue you will find a magazine offer that is a "humdinger" and we are sure you will want to take advantage of it. Just fill out the coupon and send or bring it with your money—to this office and we'll do the rest.

The shell of the building that once housed the Kroger grocery, is rapidly being salvaged. Wonder if a nice apartment house on the site wouldn't be a good investment.

We want to acknowledge all of the fine comments that have come into our hands about this little column. We just try to fill in a little each week and if any of you readers have anything you think could be used—send it to us.

The new James Theatre will open some time the middle of March. It is going to be very up-to-date and modern in every way. The same James will displace the name Unique and we think that that will be a better name than the one now in use. It never appealed to us much.

Tom Percival bought out Frank's Department Store recently, and we hope he is successful in his venture and gives Walton a good store. We think he can do it.

With this little bit of advice, we will close the column for this week: "If you see a fault in others, think of two of your own, and do not add a third one by your hasty judgment."—Flanner.

Mr. and Mrs. Ed Whitcomb of Dayton, and Mr. and Mrs. Matt VanLeuven of Ft. Thomas, Ky., and Jackie Souler were guests Sunday of Mrs. Art Stamler and Edna Stamler.

Mr. and Mrs. Lee Sanders of Walnut Hills, Cincinnati, spent the week end here the guests of Mr. Sanders' mother, Mrs. Lena Sanders of High street.

HARDWOOD HIGHLIGHTS

By MAOL-CHOLM

BEARCATS OVERWHELM MORGAN, 40 TO 19

Revenge (for an early season defeat) had been the motto of the Bearcats in preparation for their tilt with Morgan High school of Pendleton County, at the local hardwood on Friday night, last—and they got it in a big way. The Cats gained their opponents as so many Bearcats would gang a bee hive, and the sweetness therefrom amounted to a 40 to 19 victory for "our boys."

The game started off as though it might be a thriller, with both teams scoring 4 points in the first quarter but from then on it was "too bad" for Morgan's Raiders. At the intermission the Cats were leading 14 to 4, and in the third quarter added 12 more points to their opponents 2 to 4. In the final stanza the locals outscored the visitors only 14 to 13, but the totals gave Walton-Verona 40 to 19 win.

For the winning Bearcats, Osborn accounted for 16 points, and Pennington was second with 10, while defensively Chapman was "taking care" of the boys. Jenkins was high scorer for Morgan with 7 points.

The Cats played in spurts of brilliance but showed flashes of brilliance in both defensive and offensive work. If they can continue at this pace, they should be plenty tough by tournament time.

Led by McElroy and Benson, who scored 23 points between them, the Walton Cubs won a 33 to 28 decision from the Morgan Reserves, in the preliminary contest.

CATS AND CUBS WIN AT HAMILTON, SATURDAY NIGHT

Coach Glenn Laws took his W-V basketballers to Hamilton, Saturday night, where they met the Farmers in a double-feature bill. The Reserve teams met first and the Walton Cubs routed their opponents 45 to 18, with Benson and Darnell doing the bulk of the offensive work. Next the Bearcats and Farmers tangled and the result was practically the same as in the opener, Walton winning this one 50 to 18. Osborn led the winners' scoring activities with 16 points.

Play at Burlington, Saturday

MRS. W. T. LAFFERTY

Secretary, Woman's Club Service University of Kentucky, Lexington

XIII—The Pioneer Woman

The Pioneer Woman has been immortalized in song and story. She was courageous, intrepid, resourceful. She matched her frail strength against the hardships of pioneer life and stood shoulder to shoulder with her husband, sharing his dangers.

She became expert in the use of her gun and in time of siege she ran the bullets and necked them, and nursed the wounded; she even defended a parol of the fort if the defenders were few. In times of peace she wove and spun and sewed, cooked, washed and planted.

A typical pioneer woman of her day, was Mary Ingles. Taken captive with her two little boys from her home at the Draper Meadows she met her captivity with smiling courage. Realizing she could not carry the children on her back and keep up with her captors, and knowing they would be tomahawked if they lagged behind, she set to work to win the goodwill of the Indians.

She kept cheerful while on the march and when the party camped for the night, she quietly set about cooking the evening meal. This she did so well that grunts of satisfaction from the Indians were her reward. She was up early in the morning and cooked breakfast and when all had eaten and they were ready to break camp, she deliberately chose a good horse and mounted it, taking her children on with her to ride the rest of the way.

When they reached the Indian village her children were taken from her and soon died and then she decided to make her escape.

By and by the Indians decided to go to the Big Bone Lick, near the present town of Covington, to make salt, and took Mary along to cook it.

When the Indians got tired and began to hunt, Mary saw her chance to escape and obtained permission from her adopted father to go hunt wild grapes. She induced an old Dutch woman to accompany her and they ran away. With only a blanket and a tomahawk apiece, they traveled a distance of 200 miles following the Ohio river along the northern border of the state for 40 days and 40 nights, hiding from Indians, fleeing from wild beasts living on nuts and berries and roots fording creeks, swimming rivers, crossing Big Bone Lick to the Kenawha River where she found her husband and home.

Twenty years later Boone came to Kentucky and built Boonesboro Fort. One summery Sunday in 1776 three lovely girls were stolen from Boonesboro by the Indians. They were Jennie Boone, daughter of Daniel and Betsy and Frances Calloway daughters of Colonel Calloway.

Their tragic story has gone down in history as written in a letter by Colonel John Floyd, but a more detailed account was given by Keezle Calloway French, a younger sister of Betsy and Frances after she was an old lady.

She said the young girls slipped off of the fort, untied a boat from its moorings and were enjoying a afternoon. Misses Bonnie Jump and Marcell Lawrence were supper guests of Miss Elfreda Lafferty of Polson, last Friday evening, before attending the basketball game at Independence.

Mr. and Mrs. Woodrow Kuhn of Williamstown, were down Saturday afternoon looking over their farm and calling on Mrs. Warren Dunlap and little daughter.

Misses Mary Mildred and Jean Pettit entertained their friend Deloris Losey, Saturday night.

The Homemakers Sunday School class will meet with Mrs. Edith Martin, Thursday afternoon, Feb. 24th and enjoy a Valentine party. Each member is asked to bring a comic Valentine.

The Treasure Hunt

By MARCIA DINSMORE
© McClure Newspaper Syndicate,
WNU Service.

IF MARY JANE had been brought up in America, had read all the children's classics which most of us know by heart, she would never have started on her absurd treasure hunt. The mere fact that her father had bought a little island for their summer home would have been enough to kill romance.

But Mary Jane, properly speaking, had never been brought up at all.
She had been born in China, where all things are mysterious and nothing is impossible.

The very day after the old fisherman had showed Mary Jane, her father, and old Howard Taz, to Cameo Island, the girl set out to hunt for treasure.

Look for a thing hard enough and you can always find it. Mary Jane had not been hunting for more than an hour before she dropped on her knees with a cry of delight, and ran caressing finger tips over a flat, whitewashed stone, carefully let in red paint.

"Oh, dad," she read aloud, with little gasps of delight. "Yale, 21." Then, a little apart, and below the rest, evidently pointed at a different time, "23."

Mary Jane, noting the passage of time, rose and walked slowly back to the cottage, hugging herself in an ecstasy of pleasure.

Spencer, Charles W. Wallace, Billie Peace, Henry Wallace, Alva Hon and Lou Ann Wallace. They had "Not at all, dear. But don't forget to tell me later."

The next day was a busy one for Mary Jane. "E. N." was fairly clear, unless the pirate had been deliberately misleading. It must mean "east of northeast." She traced the direction as accurately as she could, but it led disappointingly soon, into the sea. The route was carefully marked with a little row of stones, however, before she turned to the rest of the inscription.

"Yale," boomed her no more.
There was a university of that name, she knew.

Of course the numbers were most important. They might mean degrees, they might mean feet, or yards, or inches. For an absorbing week Mary Jane measured and speculated and dug little irregular holes in the sand, along the guiding line of stones.

It was the second week before she thought of digging under the little rock itself, and the excitement of the idea so possessed her that she did not hear the grating of a boat's prow on the beach, nor the approach of the rower until an amused voice spoke at her side.

"Oh, I say!"

Mary Jane turned a startled face upward, the warm brown ringlets falling back from her flushed and lovely cheeks. Small wonder that Edward Ellsworth Newcomb, Yale 1921, at first could add nothing to his first inane exclamation.

Mary Jane rose and backed rapidly away.

"Oh, don't go! Please! I'm sorry.
I just wondered why you happened to be digging up that particular rock."

"I was hunting for the treasure," she explained shyly. "It says 'east of northeast.' Do you know what the numbers mean?"

He stared at her incredulously.
"With easy cynicism he had almost said, 'Beautiful but dumb.' But after a second look he knew better.
'Let's sit on the sand,' he suggested, 'while you tell me about the treasure.'"

His voice was so pleasant, and his eyes so kind, just like dad's, that Mary Jane curled up contentedly on the sand, her back against a rock, and told him all about China and Stevenson and Cameo Island.

Newcomb listened intently, his eyes never leaving her face. Inwardly he wished that his three sisters had had the advantage of an education in China.

"I didn't know anyone was living on Cameo Island," he said, when she had finished. "I've been here before, once or twice, but I didn't know until now that there was treasure here."

"Look here," he said, after a moment of thought, "why not let me help you hunt? Take me up to meet your dad, and maybe he'll let me rover now and then to take a hand."

"It would be wonderful!" sparkled the girl. "And do you think we'd really find treasure?"

"I'm sure of it," he replied definitely. "But it may not be in Spanish doubloons," he warned her.

"Oh!" She was disappointed. "But I suppose there are other kinds of treasure just as good as gold."

As he helped her to her feet, his hand caught hers tightly for a moment. "There are!" he said with conviction, and looked straight into her eyes. "And some of them are a thousand times better."

"Take You Home Kathleen"

The song "I'll Take You Home Again Kathleen" was composed in 1875 by Thomas P. Westendorf at Plainfield, Ind., while he was a music instructor at the Indiana Boy's school. A memorial, a bronze plaque mounted on a base of Bedford stone, is on the site where the song was first played and sung. The memorial was dedicated September 23, 1929, bears the chorus of the ballad, and is inscribed: "This ballad is placed in commemoration of the author of this song said by Thomas Edison to be one of America's immortal ballads."

"Purebred," "Thoroughbred"

In popular usage the terms are practically synonymous. Both refer to animals which have been bred from the best blood through a long line and whose pedigrees have been recorded for generations. The United States Department of Agriculture favors restricting the word "thoroughbred" to thoroughbred horses exclusively, while "purebred" and "pureblooded" are used when referring to other animals.

History of "Scotty" Dog

Dates Back to Year 1822. The history of the beloved Scottish terrier is uncertain, although as far back as 1822 there is reference to him. Practically all Scottish terriers are descended from two main lines, great grandsons of the first registered sire, Bright, who lived around 1870, according to a writer in the Washington Star.

The handsome Newfoundland, on the other hand, has an ancient lineage, and to him goes the honor of being the only dog ever to have had his picture on a state seal. Newfoundland stamp, of course. His ancestors were probably brought to this continent by Norwegian sailors soon after John Cabot rediscovered Newfoundland in 1497 and the Newfoundland folk used him in place of the horse. Fish being plentiful, he thrived but did not spread to other parts of the world until early in the nineteenth century, when epidemics and a depression hit the country simultaneously and the courts decided that there must be more than one Newfoundland in a family. Many were given away to shipping crews, and the good natured animals made themselves useful aboard ship by relieving those that fell overboard. Sailors proudly exhibited the skill of their dogs in the water when they arrived in port, and some of the hunters had them retrieving game on water in both England and the United States.

Universities, Colleges

Are Slightly Different

A university is defined as an institute organized for teaching and study in higher branches of learning, and empowered to confer degrees in special departments, as theology, law, medicine, and the arts. In the United States, observes a writer in the Indianapolis News, a university typically comprises a college and one or more graduate or professional schools, but the term is sometimes loosely used.

The name "college" is applied to an institute of higher learning affiliated with a university. In the United States the college is primarily an institution of higher learning receiving approved graduates of preparatory schools and offering instruction in arts, letters, and science, leading to the bachelor's degree; there is, however, no clear line of demarcation, as institutions have retained the name "college" while extending their instruction to university scope.

In the universities the name "college" is usually given to the division of the institution in the liberal arts and sciences, leading to the bachelor's degree; in some universities the various divisions, including graduate and professional schools are named "colleges."

Meanings Attached to Flowers

Poetry, tradition and popular usage have ascribed different meanings to flowers, though there is no authoritative list or uniform agreement. Here are the meanings of a few: Anemone, anticipation, frailty; apple blossom, admiration; buttercup, wealth; calla lily, magnificent beauty; primrose, white camellia, innate worth; cardinal flower, distinction; cornflower, delicacy; cowslip, youthful beauty; daffodil, unrequited love; daisy, simplicity, innocence; dandelion, coquetry; forget-me-not, true love; foxglove, insincerity; geranium, gentility; golden rod, encouragement; heather, loneliness; heliotrope, devotion; white heather, good fortune; hollyhock, ambition; honeysuckle, friendship; hyacinth, sorrow; narcissus, vanity; orange blossom, marriage; rose, love; shamrock, loyalty; and the violet, modesty.

The Air We Breathe

Air is a mixture of gases, mainly nitrogen and oxygen; of these, the former supplies nearly four-fifths of the total, observes a writer in London Answers Magazine. There is a layer of air extending nearly 200 miles beyond the surface of the earth, but at great heights it becomes extremely rarefied. Those airplanes which wish to fly to high altitudes must carry a supply of oxygen. Although we are not aware of it, the air which surrounds us has a definite weight. At sea-level a cubic yard of air weighs more than two pounds. Air is essential to all forms of life. If there were no air in the water of streams, ponds, etc., there would be no life in them. Although air has a definite weight, we do not feel it, because it acts inside as well as outside our bodies, and so "strikes a balance."

Dogs Ahead of Us

Dogs probably wagged friendly tails or barked at the first American settlers who landed on both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, because, although cattle, horses and other domestic animals were introduced to this continent from Europe, the dog was here ahead of us, comfortably established in many a tepee, asserts a writer in the Washington Star. Dogs owned by the Indians were about the size of a small collie; were usually white and had long coats. They have virtually disappeared, and the Mexican hairless and chihuahua are the only so-called native dogs in existence, although they, too, may have been imported. All other dogs known as American have been produced from experiments with breeds not native to this continent.

Several centuries ago people seemed not only indifferent to pain, but almost to love it. In Spain, particularly, it was a common custom for lovers to scourge themselves during Holy Week to win the admiration of their sweethearts. If a flagellant met a pretty woman on the street and was able to strike himself so that some of the blood sprinkled on her, his honor was great and the lady was grateful.

Mrs. Dollie Turner Passes

The Death Angel has descended upon our community and taken one of our most loved young women Mrs. Dollie Courtney Turner. Her death came as both a shock and a surprise to her many friends and loved ones. With so young and so much to live for, God saw cause to call her, yet her going is inexplicably sad. She was born May 23, 1919 and was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Worth Courtney of Tandy. She died January 30, 1938, being 18 years, 8 months and 4 days old at the time of her death. On March 6, 1937 she was married to Raymond Turner of this county, and to this union a little daughter was born January 13, 1938, who survives her.

On the day of her death she had been brought to the home of her parents from Kings Daughters Hospital, where she had recently undergone an operation. She seemed to be much improved and ate a hearty supper. Some a heart attack ensued, which proved fatal in a short while. Dollie became a member of the Ghent Christian Church several years ago and was always a faithful member. She was loyal to her many friends and devoted to her family.

Besides her small daughter, her husband and her parents, she is survived by three sisters, Loraine Julia and Allen Gene, and one brother, T. C., and several half-brothers and sisters. Funeral services were held Tuesday afternoon at the Ghent Christian Church by Rev. A. V. McConnell. The floral offerings were many and beautiful were carried by her close friends and relatives. Amid a mountain of flowers an ocean of tears and a throng of sorrowing relatives and friends, she was laid to rest in the Ghent Cemetery. We wish to express to the family our greatest, heartfelt sympathy.

"CANDID" BABY PICTURES

No camera-consciousness in this young maestro! Any parent will treasure an album of expressive snaps such as this one.

HAVE you ever thought of taking a series of "candid" or "off-guard" pictures of the baby in his lighter or more active moments, and saving them in a special album entitled "We Knew Him When"?

Any parent who owns a camera can build up a splendid collection of pictures such as this, and, if your baby is like most babies, the same pose or expression will never pop up twice.

A small baby is probably the world's ideal subject for "off-guard" pictures, because he is altogether lacking in camera consciousness. Once he learns that you won't let him chew the corners off the interesting black gadget, or pull the shiny piece of glass out of the front, he dismisses the matter and proceeds to more important things. Thereafter, you can shoot away to your heart's content.

You don't need a high-speed miniature camera to take "candid" pictures of this sort. A speedy lens is helpful, because then you can use higher shutter speeds and catch the youngster when he is trying his skill at somersaults or endeavoring to smash his rattle to pieces and see what makes it work. But a box camera will do the work pretty well if you are careful to watch for momentary pauses in the action. Even the most industrious baby comes to a brief halt now and then.

During the winter months, most of your "off-guard" baby pictures will be taken indoors, and many of them at night. Amateur photo bulbs supply enough light for the night snapshots, and your film dealer will have booklets or leaflets showing how to arrange them. With lights arranged properly, the night snaps are almost as simple as those outdoors in sunshine.

In shooting the off-guard baby pictures, watch for expressive gestures and fleeting expressions, and train yourself to catch them instantly. Snap tears as well as smiles, for they will help you remember your baby as he is now. And, whenever you put a picture in your special album, write under it the day and year when it was taken. That will help make the book a day-by-day biography which grows in value as the years roll by.

THE OLD WATER MILL

In few neighborhoods outside the mountain counties are there left any of the old water mills that used to be found on every stream. I can recall when a single small stream, nothing more than a creek, had three active mills, two of them grinding both wheat and corn and having, in addition to a sawmill, a cotton gin. One of these old mills is still running, now well over a century old. A treasured memento of old times is its toll cup, worn smooth from long use and bearing a date little later than that of the earliest settlement of the section. By the mountain brooks the mill still stand, and I have seen in recent years the once-familiar sight of people going to mill with turns of corn to be ground into meal.

Going to mill was nearly as great a going to town. One was likely to see fewer people there, but with those few he was thrown intimately for several hours, while his turn and others were going through the mill.

The typical turn was a two-bushel sack full of shelled corn, thrown across a horse's back and used for a saddle. After the corn was ground the sack was still full, even after the miller had taken his toll. Riding home was easier, for a bag of meal is a softer seat. A more pretentious trip to mill was made in the farm wagon, when several neighbors may have had turns to send. With a half dozen sacks of corn to grind, the boy who went to mill could count on being gone all day.

There were many things that one could do at the mill. It was always great sport to watch the miller with his thumb of gold, as Chaucer says, feel the meal as it poured out and adjust whatever machinery was too loose or too tight, in order that the same quality of meal might be ground. Tiring of this, we could wander over the rambling millhouse and look out on the dam. Under the wheels were rumbling and the water rushing. Leaves and trash were floating on the mill pond ready to swirl over the fall. Some times we were allowed to use the catwalk to push over some of the drift and imagine ourselves raftsmen or flatboatmen. When this became common, we could play games of Odd and Even with corn grains or exchange stories with boys from other sections or work practical jokes. When one is very hungry raw corn meal tastes good, do not try it unless you are literally starving, for it has a flavor much stronger than when it appears in corn bread. By and by the turn is ready and you ride back on your fat sack of meal, to feast for days on the product of the old water mill.

Every time I get a chance, I buy some water-ground corn meal, partly because I like its coarse, unrefined feeling and partly for old times sake. The cornbread you and I now eat may have been made from meal ground far away, but in the old days we lived with the corn from the time it was planted in the soil until it was transformed into muffins and hoe cake and corn pone.

Biography in our times makes much and rightly so, of life histories. We who used to go to the old water mill certainly knew the life history of corn, a poetic history that has never been sufficiently written.

Boone County 4-H Clubs are making plans for a record enrollment of 500 4-H club members this year.

This number represents an increase of 65 percent over the record enrollment of 318 members last year.

Increased enrollment will be accompanied with a stronger and more effective club organization in the county. Special plans have been made for leaders' and officers' training meetings. Spring Rally Day scholarship trips to Junior Week Community 4-H club tours and picnic, a week's camp for outstanding members, a county fair and picnic stock judging teams, county champions in clothing, earning, foods, corn, tobacco, poultry and other projects, achievement days, tobacco show and sale, community club competition for the banks of Boone County trophy and other special events.

Prof. D. H. Norris, president of Boone County 4-H council and superintendent of Boone County Schools and principals and teachers of the county have pledged their full support to the program. Verona and Walton 4-H clubs held their 4-H club enrollment meetings on Monday of last week with market increased enrollment. All community clubs will complete their enrollment during the next week or two.

Fever Therapy for Organs of Body May Be Developed

Pasadena, Calif.—New researches at the California Institute of Technology here hold the possibility of offering the long-sought goal of selective treatment of various organs of the body by those ultra-short radio waves now being employed to produce artificial fever in the therapy of disease.

Cancer, rheumatic fever, arthritis, syphilis, gonorrhea, St. Vitus dance, and certain ocular diseases are among the afflictions of mankind which have been treated by artificial radio waves. They all represent potential directions in which the treatment may be extended with new and, perhaps, more successful results.

Wave Absorption Studied.
Prof. G. Potapenko of the physics department is the man whose findings may yield these important practical results. For more than a year he has been investigating the absorption of short radio waves (8 inches to 4 feet in length) as they pass through many substances.

Contrary to present-held theories the point of maximum absorption seemed not to depend greatly on the size of the molecules in the substance, but rather on the size of part of the molecule which can be called the "tail." This "tail" seems to rotate freely about the axis of such molecules as those of alcohol.

To Produce Selective Heating.
The exact knowledge of the maximum of absorption is necessary to produce the selective heating of specific organs or parts of the body. Those parts containing molecules with orienting "tails" can be easily administered the sought-for selective heating therapy.

All that is necessary, points out Professor Potapenko, is to tune the radio wave generator to the wavelength corresponding to the maximum of absorption. Otherwise the effect is one of general heating like that now used to produce a general artificial fever in the whole body.

Ball-and-Socket Joint in Skull of a Dinosaur

Washington—What use was there for a ball-and-socket jointed bone at the back of a dinosaur's skull?

Charles W. Gilmore, curator of vertebrate paleontology at the United States National Museum, would like to know.

At the back of the skull of a hadrosaur, a rooster-crested monster that lived in Montana about a hundred million years ago, he has found a bone arrangement that has never been found in any other kind of dinosaur. A relatively small, triangular bone bears on its front edge a socket or cup, which fits neatly over a ball-shaped projection on the bone in front of it.

Whatever was the use of this unique skull joint, it could hardly have been to make room for the hadrosaur's massive brain. For the hadrosaur's brain was anything but massive. It couldn't have weighed more than two or three ounces. It was enough to see, hear, and probably smell with, but that was about all. But then, very likely a dinosaur never bothered to think—except possibly once in a while about another dinosaur.

Normal American Man Doesn't Look So Good

New York—Homo Americanus (male) took a debunking at Cooper Union here, at the hands of Dr. John Dollard of Yale, who has studied the species intensively, taking thousands of measurements of attitude both physical and mental.

Here's what you look like, Mr. Proud American Man:
Physically, you are potheibled, flat-chested, round-shouldered.

You believe what you read in the papers. You think the competitive system is all right, and expect to thrive thereby yourself, but you'll take your beating without whining if you do chance to lose out. Win or lose, you're for the status quo. You are married or expect to be. But you're not averse to a bit of philandering before marriage, or even after.

On the credit side: You don't like too much talk. You keep clean. You believe in education and in democracy.

Care of Woodland

Important to Farmers, Says Forester at Walton CCC Camp

Farmers who realize the desirability of building up herds for beef production or high butter fat yields often overlook the same principle in their woodlands, according to Daniel L. Crumpacker, forester of CCC Camp SCS-5-Ky, Walton, Ky.

In selecting an animal for home use the farmers usually do not take the best specimen, but save the best for breeding or for sale, he said. Yet in woodland operations, the same men often cut the finest trees for fuel or boardwood and leave standing the crooked, weak, and inferior trees. Mr. Crumpacker declared that by following proper woodland management, the farmer can build up this source of income and receive a reliable annual profit.

Take out the injured and dead trees first, was his suggestion. Then remove the inferior and less desirable species that crowd the crop trees and compete with them for growth. In this way, Mr. Crumpacker explained, seasonal firewood and other timber products may be harvested, and the most thrifty trees left to produce a more valuable crop.

Winter is the time to start a woodland management program, he said, since cold weather at this time frequently leaves the farmer with time on his hands that may be put to work at a nice profit.

The CCC camp, which is operated by the Soil Conservation Service, is interested in woodland management because trees hold topsoil on the land and prevent it from being washed away, he said. The service is completing several woodland improvement demonstrations in Boone and Kenton counties.

WALTON BOY STRUCK BY TRUCK, FRIDAY

Last Friday afternoon, Kenneth Edward Johnson, the 10-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. K. E. Johnson of South Main street, was struck by a truck in front of his home and suffered a deep cut on the head.

Clarence Galley of Norwood, O. driver of the truck, belonging to the Cincinnati Time Recording Co., told Patrolman James Bollinger that the youth ran in front of the vehicle and that he applied his brakes, but could not avoid hitting him. Galley was exonerated of blame and was not held.

The injured boy was treated by Dr. R. E. Ryle and then returned to his home, where he is recovering.

Mrs. Ora Fry of South Main street returned home Saturday from Dillboro Sanitarium, where she had been taking treatments for rheumatism. Her many friends will be pleased to know she is improving.

GOLDEN WEDDING

Anniversary Celebrated Tuesday by Mr. and Mrs. Mari Benson of High Street

Our good friends and neighbors Mr. and Mrs. Mari Benson, quietly celebrated their golden wedding anniversary at their home on High street, Tuesday.

They have been residents of Walton for 45 years, where Mr. Benson was a carpenter, until retirement. The day was a quiet one for them due to Mrs. Benson's failing health but they received many cards and words of congratulations from their many relatives and friends. And we, personally, wish to extend our sincere wishes for many more anniversaries.

AFTER THOUGHTS

By GEORGE

This has been the month of anniversaries of great people, and maybe in fifty, a hundred or more years this age can be put down in history as having had great men and women (we can't leave the women out now) who were also as great if not greater.

We are in receipt of the first volume of the dictionary that the Cincinnati Enquirer is giving with their coupons and we think they are great and would be helpful in any home or library.

§ § §
Several people have taken advantage of the "humdinger" magazine offer that we are running in the paper at this time. This is a very good bargain and we would like to see more of your subscriptions come rolling in. You can get it with either new or renewal subscriptions. So come on and let's hear from you this time.

§ § §
The first pneumatic tire for an automobile was produced in 1889 in a factory employing only a handful of men. Today it is estimated that more than a million persons are employed, either directly or indirectly producing materials for which about 1,225,000,000 pounds of rubber are required annually.

The old saying "The weather of the first three days of the new year govern the weather for the next three months," has been running true to form thus far over this year. So far the winter has been very mild and we have had some very pretty weather, although the last few days have been rather disagreeable, we can't kick about it.

§ § §
Some of the big league clubs have started the trek to their respective training camps, to prepare for the long summer tour of pleasing John Q. Fan—the most optimistic person in the world, about his favorite ball club.

Monday night was the "dollar night" in the firemen's drawing. As you know, if the drawing is held every meeting night and the reward is 50 cents, and if the name of the person drawn is not present, the award is carried over until the next week. William Clutter was the lucky one Monday night. He was the first to draw extra money. Do you still have it Bill?

§ § §
The frame building that burned a few weeks ago, has been torn completely down and it makes such a change. I have often tried to vision what it would look like and did not even get to first base—as it is really surprising, at least to us.

We are having an awful time writing this little column this week, as the source is scarce. How about a little assistance from the readers (if any) for next week. How's about it?

§ § §
We notice that the papers are still carrying the column, "New York Day by Day," written by O. O. McIntyre. He had some columns written well in advance. This is just to show the difference between a columnist and someone who knows nothing about it. We have an awful time writing one each week, but he had one every day, and found material to write them ahead.

Some people say George Washington never told a lie, but we heard a story the other day, and here it is: George's father asked him who chopped down the cherry tree, and he answered, "Popeye did." (Pop-I-did). With this bit of enlightenment we close our little session for this week.

NEW HAVEN P-T-A.

Was A Life-Long Resident of Boone County, and A Sister of the Late W. N. Hind

Mrs. Maggie Hind Hudson, age 81, passed away Friday, February 18th at 4:00 p. m., at her home on North Main street, from infirmities of old age, after an illness of two years. She was the widow of J. J. Hudson and a sister of the late W. N. Hind, Master Commissioner of Kenton County and Democratic leader. Mrs. Hudson was born in this county and had spent the greater part of her life in Walton.

The name Hudson has long been a prominent one in Walton and Boone County, where this family was one of the pioneers, and the deceased was widely known, liked and respected by all. She had long been a member of the Richmond Presbyterian Church, and until ill health prevented, had been active in church work.

Mrs. Hudson is survived by two daughters, Misses Anna and Mattie Hudson, who resided with their mother; one son, Marvin Hudson of the Walton-Bourbon Road; one sister Mrs. J. T. Boulton of Park Hills; one grandson, Marvin Hudson, Jr., and a number of other relatives and a host of friends.

Funeral services were conducted from the late residence Monday afternoon, by the Rev. J. Russell Cross, pastor of the Richmond Presbyterian Church, in a most impressive manner. Burial was in the Walton Cemetery.

The pallbearers were D. L. Lusby, Alan Gaines, Sam Hudson, Charley Chambers, Evan Hance and Malcolm McDonald.

Funeral Directors Chambers & Grubbs had charge of the arrangements.

EDWARD HENSLEY

Edward Hensley, age 21, died at his home in Williamstown, Thursday, Feb. 17th, following a nine-day illness of pneumonia. The body was removed to the Coates, Stewart & Hedger Funeral Home, where it lay in state until the funeral was conducted Sunday from the home, with Rev. Orle Hale, in charge. The songs, "Old Ragged Cross," "Jesus Lover of My Soul," and "It Is Well" were rendered by Jean Burroughs and Wanda and Loyal McGill.

The remains were laid to rest in the Williamstown Cemetery. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Helen Hensley, and father, Clarence Hensley. Coates, Stewart & Hedger had charge of the funeral arrangements.

FSA Chattel Transfers Require Legal Releases

Persons selling, trading or receiving chattels mortgaged to the Farm Security Administration as security for rehabilitation loans are liable to court action by the government if legal releases have not been secured according to a notice received from the regional attorney, reports W. O. Blackburn, county rehabilitation supervisor of the FSA, Independence, Ky.

Restrictions are placed on sale or transfer of chattels mortgaged to FSA not only to provide partial security for rehabilitation loans but to insure maintenance of sufficient operating funds to keep the farm on a productive basis and carry out farm plans, says the notice.

Where sale or trade of mortgaged chattels is necessary because of changes in farm operation, authorization of transfer of such property should be secured through the county supervisors office, Blackburn pointed out.

Hit By Auto While Walking On Highway Near Holbrook

Lloyd Hensley, son of Lester Hensley of Holbrook, was struck by an automobile Sunday night while he was walking on the highway near Holbrook. His condition at first did not seem alarming, but on further examination by Dr. Chrisman of Owenton, Monday, proved him to be suffering from internal injuries. He was rushed to Good Samaritan Hospital, Cincinnati in the ambulance of Coates, Stewart & Hedger. On arrival further examination revealed his condition to be very serious.

New Theatre To Open March 10th

Workmen are now putting the finishing touches on the building that is to house the new James Theatre and will be open to the public on or about March 10th. Mr. Falls has gone to quite a bit of expense in order that the public can boast of a theatre that most towns of this size do not have. From what we have seen, it will be second to none, for the size of the town.

In the old stand this week will find two good shows, "Nothing Sacred" for Friday and Saturday, and "Love and Hisses," for Sunday and Monday. "Nothing Sacred" is filmed in technicolor, and stars Fredric March and Carole Lombard. "Love and Hisses" finds Ben Bernie, a. Walter Winchell as each other, usual, supported by Simone Simon, who sings in this cinema, Joan Davis and Bert Lahr. For good entertainment don't fail to see these two pictures.

PLANTING THE GARDEN

An annual event that always brought much joy to the smaller farm children was the planting of the garden. After the boys grew up and could work in the fields, gardening was regarded as silly. How romantic seemed the making of ridges, the opening of the small furrows for seeds, the dropping of the seeds themselves became a species of poetry, common but mysterious and mystical. I always liked to observe the various forms and sizes of seeds. It was hard to keep me from opening the packages before planting time for I was eager to see and feel these potential little bodies that produced accurately "after their kind."

From the earliest planting to the latest several weeks intervened. Lettuce, cabbage, and mustard could be sown on the tobacco planted, and peas, potatoes, beets, and radishes could soon follow in the open garden. But tender things like beans had to wait until danger of frost was over. Good Friday was our neighborhood's official day to plant beans. The late summer, after all the spring garden had been used up was the time to plant mustard, winter and summer turnips, and sometimes other vegetables. One old man of my acquaintance set July 26, rain or shine, for the day to plant turnips.

Poetic as all of this is, there is another side quite as poetic, the folk side. Nearly every vegetable was planted according to some folk rule or custom. Potatoes and root crops should be planted in the dark of the moon; vegetables that grow above the ground are light-of-the-moon plants. Corn, however, grows a stalk according to the time of its planting; heavy and short is planted in the dark of the moon; slender and tall in the light of the moon. If any one gives you vegetable or flower seeds, do not thank the giver; do so only to prevent the seeds from doing well. When you get ready to plant pepper, be sure to get thoroughly angry if you want the pepper to be hot. (Parenthetically, it was usually easy enough to get up a little temper when the burden of planting the garden fell on the head, or hands, of the household.) It is not advisable to plant watermelons and pumpkins near each other, for the bitter taste of the pumpkins will invade the sweet of the watermelons. Lettuce grown on a planted will taste like tobacco. Plenty of it does so, anyway. The odd-shaped grains of corn at the stem will produce odd grains and should not be allowed in the seed corn. Similarly, the smaller grains at the end of the ear will produce small grains. Only the regular grains in the middle are to be planted.

It would be a great study for some one if he would test all these strange beliefs, some of which are evident superstitions, others with a grain of truth. Good Friday as a time to plant tender things is not so bad for there is seldom much severe weather after that day. Like signs of rain, all garden signs fall sometimes, but that does not render them invalid to most people. One weather prophet of our time said it never rained at night in July. There is enough truth in this to prevent most people from testing it, for summer rains are usually afternoon showers. However, some of the hardest rains I ever recorded fell on July nights even in the neighborhood where the wiseacre lived. Probably the gardeners do not want to be convinced and would rather attribute success or failure to the light or dark of the moon.

WILLIAM MACLEOD RAINE

OWNED BY SERVICE

CHAPTER I

(In the old Western parlance the commendation, "He's a man to ride the river with," was the highest possible praise. It meant that one could be trusted in all emergencies.)

Sun rays were streaming through the mesquite when Ruth rode out of the arroyo. In the light of morning the dust in the air from the heart sand, finer than powdered sugar, gave the atmosphere a faint rose color.

Ruth Chiswick drew a deep breath, almost a sigh. The desert could show its teeth grimly, but it could be poignantly lovely too. This was her country. It held her by a thousand ties, yet she was beginning to be afraid of the ruthlessness that struck at life so savagely. All plant and animal life had its sting. Nothing survived without a struggle. Always the desert fought to destroy.

Ruth was greatly worried. She had gone such a little way in life, was so inexperienced. At the parting of the ways, she did not know what to do. Her problems were two, though they merged into one. That her father lived in constant danger from the lawless rustlers of Tall Holt she knew. He took no precautions. Instead of biding his time until he could crush them he blundered and threatened. Some day he would be dry-gulched from the brush.

Though at times there was stormy conflict between father and daughter, the tie which bound them together was very close. To Ruth the peril in which he stood had become an obsession. She must save him at any cost, and she believed she had found the way to do it. That fat slug Sherman Howard was the leader of the outlaws, yet kept within the law himself, as far as she knew. If he gave the word for his men to keep their hands off L stock the rustlers would obey him. No longer would there be cause of strife between these light-armed riders and Lee Chiswick.

And Sherman Howard had a son who was no fat slug but a dark handsome youth with a merry laugh. Ruth liked Lou Howard very much. He was wild, of course. She did not know him well, and there had been moments when there had flashed out evidence of moral callousness. So it had seemed, but a few days afterward his warm smile had banished doubts. He had given her to understand that she was the one woman with influence enough to keep him straight, and she was young enough to be attracted by the thought of snatching so good-looking a brand from the burning. There was something romantic about clandestine meetings with the son of the enemy of her house.

She had flirted with a lot of boys in an innocent way, but she did not know anything about love—unless the emotion she felt for Lou Howard came under that category. At times a strange feeling flooded her, almost religious in its intensity, that she had been appointed to save her father by marrying this young man. Lou was in her mind a great deal. She was not sure about him.

The last time they had met he had kissed her. Indignantly she had pushed him away, but afterward—thinking of that ardent embrace alone in her room—she knew her indignation had been a fraud. She had been chary of favors to boys. None of them had ever kissed her like that, with a fire which had stirred in her reluctant response.

A young man rode out of the mesquite and flung up a hand in greeting. She watched him as he cantered forward, flung himself into the saddle, and strode to meet her. A queer little thrill ran through her, and after a it a tremor of fear. He was essentially a stranger, as many men are to the girls who marry them, yet it was likely he was going to be the most important person in her life.

"I was afraid you wouldn't come," he said, and kissed her hand. Ruth took it away, embarrassed. Hand-kissing on the frontier was something alien. "I said I would be here," she reminded him.

"So you did." He looked at her eagerly, boyishly. "Is it going to be yes?"

She nodded. "I think so." He reached up to help her from the horse, but she shook her head. "No, I can't stay but a minute."

"You can rest your saddle that minute, can't you, honey?"

The girl knew what he wanted, to take her in his arms and make love to her. She discovered that she did not want him to do that—not yet, at least. Until she knew him better she did not want to be kissed, not with urgent passion.

"No, I slipped away, and I have to get back. They'll miss me." She asked, abruptly, a wave of color in her cheeks. "Are you sure you still want me?"

"Of course I do." He frowned up at her, irritated. He had ridden 30 miles to meet her and she held him at arm's length. "But get down and let me talk. Ruth, if we're going to get married—"

"I don't know you, and you don't know me," she interrupted.

"Course I know you," he denied. "You're the prettiest girl in the county. I know all about you, and you know about me. I'm wild about you. What's the sense in sitting up there like—the queen of Sheba?"

Very likely he was right. Ruth had been brought up in a household of men without the guidance of a mother. She slipped from the saddle and stood beside him.

He took her in his arms and she submitted, withholding herself.

"You're strong back from my embrace. That he was dissatisfied with her lack of response she knew.

"Be patient with me—at first," she begged. "I'm worried, Lou. I don't know whether what we're going to do is right. I—I—I'm scared."

Promises poured out of him. He would make her happy. He would reconcile their fathers. There would no longer be war on the range. Forgetting all the other girls, he would make her the best husband in the territory. All she had to do was to trust him and he would fix it. She must not worry.

Yet she did worry, even as they made the arrangements for the elopement. The weight was still in her breast as she rode back up the arroyo. The sun was not in the copious sky. From the far canyons the mist had vanished. Harsh and clear, the desert air filled the desert. All its sharp teeth showing.

Into Tall Holt, near the close of a hot day, rode a man on a long-barreled roan.

The rider dismounted at a store-barn called on the false front a sign, "Yell Sanger, General Merchandise." He dropped the reins at a hitchrack and looked up the street to orient himself. Through the hazy amber light of late afternoon he saw Tall Holt drowse in a coma of sleep.

The street was crossed by a saloon and a gambling-house. Four saloons, a blacksmith shop, another general store, a Chinese restaurant, a shoemaker's cubby hole, and a public corral were checked off by the stranger. Leisurely he turned and walked with trailing spurs into Sanger's store.

In addition to Sanger, who was a bald-headed little fellow with black gimlet eyes, two cowboys were in the place. They were lounging in a corner. Conversation ceased at the entrance of the newcomer. All three gazed at him.

They saw a crook-nosed man of middle size with leathery brown face in which were set light gray eyes, from the corners of which radiated many tiny wrinkles. He might be thirty years old, perhaps a year or two less. His movements had a kind of rippling ease and he carried himself with an assurance almost insolent. When he took off his dusty hat he showed a thick head of hair burnt sorrel by a thousand untended suns. He wore shiny leathers and high-heeled boots, an open vest, no coat. A gun hung low on his thigh, well forward. A tough hombre, it could be guessed, able to take care of himself in any emergency.

Sanger slashed open a can with a hatchet.

"Some hot on the desert," the storekeeper suggested.

The crook-nosed man drank the juice from the can, then flung out a tomato. "Some," he assented. "I got to thinkin' if Tall Holt was any farther off it must be near somewhere."

Experimentally, one of the cowboys murmured, "You come quite a ways?"

The crook-nosed man looked at him. Apparently this did not call for an answer. "Yes, sir," he said, dryly, he drawled, after shifting his gaze to Sanger.

"That's right," the second cowboy agreed. "He was a top-legged man with a lank lower jaw."

"Sure is," his companion said. "Well, I'll be mossykin, Mile High." "Yo tamblen, Sid," all men concurred promptly, unwilling to let his full height. "I'll take a plug of Horse-Shoe, Sanger."

He followed Sid from the building. "Town kinda quiet," the stranger said. "Liable to live up later," Sanger told him.

From where he sat on a counter the man with the sorrel-top could see the two cowboys looking at his horse. Words drifted to him from a double-cinch-Texas man. "Mile High hazarded."

"Yep. No tenderfoot," Sid rolled a cigarette.

"Not none. Plenty tough." The tall man said something more, in a low voice.

Sid laughed, harshly. "I wouldn't know."

They bowedlegged across the road to the Golden Nugget.

"Tall Holt takes notice of a stranger," the newcomer mentioned dryly.

Sanger did not answer. His small black eyes were taking in with a vast surprise two people who had come into the store.

"Evening, Miss Chiswick—Lou," he greeted them.

The man he had called Lou drew the storekeeper aside for a whispered conference. He was wearing new corduroys, fancy top-boots, an expensive sombrero, and a purple silk shirt around the neck of which was tied loosely a polka-dot bandanna. On his dark, handsome face there was just now a sulky look. In went racing up the street in a cloud of dust. Apparently he had forgotten what he had come to get, for he limped across to the cow-boys in front of the Golden Nugget, selected one mounted, and rode away with a wild yell.

Sanger showed cautiously the top of his head above the counter. "If 'twere over," drawled the crook-nosed man, and his weapon vanished from sight. He gave the girl a hand to help her up from where he had flung her. "You were about right, Mr. Sanger. You know a yore town. It livened up like you promised."

Ruth Chiswick stood beside him, bending a little faster than the man, her cheeks still pale. The man with whom she was eloping came round the corner of the counter. He was carrying a revolver.

"I would sure have got that bird if I hadn't seen he didn't mean business," Lou Howard boasted.

Ruth looked at him, scorn in her eyes. The score was less for her than for herself. For hours she had been discovering that the man she had chosen was vain, shallow, and a boaster. Now she knew too that he lacked courage, the one essential virtue on the frontier for both good and bad.

"Watching him through a knot-hole maybe," the stranger suggested lazily, a hint of derision in his murmured comment.

Lou turned to Ruth. "Let's get out of here," he said sulkily. "Sanger is going to send Spicer down to Ma Presnal's."

The crook-nosed man remembered having seen a sign on the street mentioning that Al Spicer was a justice of the peace.

In a low voice Ruth said, "I'd like to speak with you alone, Lou."

"Sure," he replied. "On the way down to the hotel."

"No. At the back of the store," Her voice was almost a whisper.

He followed her reluctantly toward the small locked-in office.

The girl talked fast and low. She seemed to be both urging and pleading.

An angry cat ripped into her words. "Haw, you got crazy, Howard demanded, raising his voice. "Think you can make a fool of me?"

She spoke again, trying to calm him.

He would not listen. "You can't do this crazy thing. You've compromised yourself. Don't you see it?"

The girl talked faster and lower. "You'll say—"

Ruth began to lose patience. "Never mind what they'll say. I've made up my mind. I'm going home."

"You got no right to treat me that way. I'm not going to stand for it."

"I'm sorry, but be sensible, Lou. Be glad I've found out in time."

He hung a name at her. She looked at him for a moment steadily, then turned and walked up the stairs.

"My name is Ruth Chiswick," she told the man with the rusty hair. "I'm much obliged to you for looking after me."

"Nothing at all, Miss. I'm a stranger here—name, Jeff Gray."

Lou Howard joined them and broke in curtly, speaking to Ruth. "Let's get out where we can be alone and talk this over."

The name he had called her still rang like a bell in her heart.

"I've nothing more to say to you, sir," she said, and again there was the sting of a lash in the low voice.

Ruth turned to walk from the store, but instead of doing so stood rigid, her eyes fixed on two men riding down the street.

She said, over her shoulder: "You better light out; my father is here."

The young man took one look at the dismounting men. "Maybe I had better get out of here. I'm having trouble with him," he faltered.

He left by the side door. The girl did not even notice him go.

"I don't see how Father could have found out already," she said, frowning in thought.

"But that doesn't matter. I'll go meet him."

Gray shook his head. That would not do. Decent girls could not go out with a player like the Golden Nugget for any reason. He heard himself, to his own surprise, offering to do her errand.

He walked across the road into the gambling-house.

A big, fat, heavy-shouldered man who was playing solitaire lifted his head as Sid and Mile High came into the Golden Nugget. He beckoned them to him.

"What's all the shootin' about?" he asked.

One of the men playing poker at the next table leaned back to catch the answer.

"Jim Pender on one of his toots," Sid replied. "Wants to clean up the town again, Sherm."

Sherman Howard frowned down at the table and shifted a queen. "He'll go just so far, that bird."

The man at the poker table, a tall, broad-shouldered fellow with black curly hair, said significantly, "He's here only for a short visit."

"I reckon you're shootin', Curly," agreed Mile High. "I never liked any of that, bull-puss warrior's game."

He mentioned, in a low voice, news that might or might not be important. "Stranger in our midst."

"Where?" asked Curly.

"Over at Sanger's. Drapped in on a big roan that has been rode far."

"What kind of a guy?" inquired Howard.

"Red-headed. Tough as they come. Wears his gun low."

Howard made a sign and a man stroked away from the faro table. He was a slim, hard-eyed young fellow sporting a fancy silk bandanna tied loosely round his neck. He mounted, and he went under was Morgan Norris. He was known to be a killer.

"Stranger over at Sanger's, Morg?" the solitary player said.

"And size him up," said the two men. "The Golden Nugget walked a stir, as a breath of wind does in a field of grain. Out of the corner of his mouth Curly murmured, "Look up the Golden Nugget. The one momentarily diminished. The bartender stopped polishing a glass. To Morgan Norris, in a whisper, Mile High warned: "Keep your shirt on, Morg. Let Sherm make the play."

The men who had just walked into the gambling-house had the stamp of their calling written on every crease of their dusty clothes, on every wrinkle of their weather-beaten faces. Both were big men who had taken on the solidity that comes with years.

Unless his salient, close-shut jaw, his steady, keen, blue eyes gave him away, the older man, Lee Chiswick, was one of dominant will, one who would fight for his rights. His companion and foreman, Dan Brand, was a barrel-chested fellow of their calling written on every line of his face. On his tanned, open face there was the hint of a smile, not unfriendly, as if he offered it to mitigate the hostility of his chief.

A thin, satiric smile rested on the face of Sherman Howard. He leaned back in his chair, opaque eyes fastened on the older of the newcomers.

"Nice to have you drop in on us, Lee. You don't often get around Tall Holt way. We sure feel honored." He nodded at the younger man. "You, too, Brand. Both welcome as the flowers in May. Pete, take the orders. The house is drinking on me."

"I don't drink with you or any of your crowd, Howard," said Lee Chiswick harshly. "I'm here strictly for business."

Through the swing doors a man dropped into the Golden Nugget. He was a stranger who had given his name as Jeff Gray.

"Tall Holt will welcome you business, Lee. You have always been cash on the barrel-head," Howard said, his attention blantly, ignoring the insult.

"I came to serve notice that anyone who steals my stock from now on will do so at his own risk," Chiswick announced. "I've given my men orders to shoot rustlers at sight."

A tense silence followed the words of the cattleman, one pregnant with peril. Gray's gaze swept the room. Unless rumor lied, three-fourths of these men present must be cattle rustlers.

Instinctively Gray knew that half a dozen men were waiting for the cue. Howard gave it to them. For the time at least his decision was for peace.

"That's fine," he said with suave mockery. "Sooner we get rid of scoundrels of that kind the better."

"You can pass the word that any I catch will be handed to the nearest live oak," Chiswick said flatly.

Morgan Norris, a tall, thin man, his eyes narrowed, his voice low. "Having anyone particular in mind, Mr. Chiswick?"

"Meaning anyone the shoe fits," Howard answered for the cattleman. "And I don't reckon that is anybody present, Morg. If there is any way we can help Mr. Chiswick, we will all be glad to do so. Am I right, boys?"

"Sure you're right, Sherm," agreed Curly Connor heartily. "If you can use me, Mr. Chiswick, I'm much obliged."

"Don't want your help," Chiswick flung out bitterly. "I'll look out for my own stuff and find out whether an honest man has a chance against a pack of thieves. What I'm here to tell you is that from now on I'll be sheriff, judge, and hangman on the L C range."

Dan Brand, foreman of the L C outfit, poured oil on the rolled waters. "We're not here to start trouble but to stop it. This steal is getting so big the L C has got to bust it up, or go broke. We don't claim to know who is doing this rustling. If we did, our job would be easy."

"We don't know, but we can guess," Chiswick cut in hardily.

"Out loud?" Norris asked, his eyes slits of menace.

The swing doors of the gambling-hall burst wide open. A wild yell brought everybody in the room to attention. Excitedly a horse did a nervous dance on the floor. Its flushed rider waved a rifle about recklessly. Long black hair fell to the knees and the shirt tails were fringed, the fancy vest decorated.

Two Trees . .

Two trees stand side by side in the meadow. They receive the same sunshine, the same rain.
Yet one is lush with leaves—the other has but few.Two children attend the same class in school. They receive the same instruction, study from identical books. Yet one gets good marks—the other, poor.Why? Not because one child is less intelligent than the other, but because his eyesight is not as good. He can't study his lessons as early. He can't concentrate.
The more he tries the more he falters. For eyestrain makes him nervous and irritable. His studies soon become distasteful as well as unintelligible.It's unwise and unfair to take chances with your child's future by continuing to "assume" his eyes are all right.

Scene of Notorious Massacre Awatovi, Arizona, was the scene of one of the most notorious massacres of the Southwest. The tiny village was one of the first Hopi centers encountered by Coronado's men in their march of 1540. The Hopi and the white men were close friends until 1680 when the Indians joined their pueblo neighbors and ejected the Spaniards. The massacre was detonated, most authorities agreed, when the people of Awatovi welcomed the Spaniards back several years later in defiance of their red brothers.

The Black Sheep

By KARIN C. SUNDELPH
© McClure Newspaper Syndicate, WNU Service.

IT had not been the fourth day of the month, on which night Mr. McKenzie always stayed and went over all accounts, the whole field would have been clear for Lanky. If it had not been for a crate of new china which had just come in at that evening so that nobody had had time to unpack it, Lanky would have got away in spite of Mr. McKenzie.

Instead of that he sprawled headlong over the crate in the darkness, and the report from Mr. McKenzie's .32-caliber was followed by a volley of unbecomingly loud from Lanky. Mr. McKenzie only shot once in the air, then turned on the lights, and came over the prostrate figure, his revolver still pointed.

"Better take that black rag off your eyes," he ordered. "I guess I've got you good. No getting away this time, George, you're on a kid!"

Lanky eyed him sullenly. He could well see that the chances of slipping away from behind Mr. McKenzie's portly and murderous looking implement were mighty slim. His capitol sat down on a packing box, and held out his hand.

"If you have anything there to kill me with, you'd better hand it over, son," said he.

Lanky settled himself in a more dignified position, and turned over a well-worn old bowie-knife into the outstretched hand.

"Looks like you were trying out some Spanish pirate stunts," remarked Mr. McKenzie. "Weren't you cal'culating to use this on me, were you?"

"I'd sooner die than use that on somebody," admitted the boy.

"That's talking," said Mr. McKenzie, putting up his revolver.

"Well, son, I own this store, and I'm kind of cal'culating to keep what's in it. What gave you the idea that you'd ought to have some of it?"

"I dunno." The boy swallowed hard.

"What's your name?" "Everybody calls me Lanky."

"How old are you?" "Seventeen."

"Wouldn't exactly like to spend five or ten years up the river, I take it?"

"No, sir." The boy swallowed hard.

"I just had to do it, I guess," he explained duly. "I was born bad, that's all. I ain't got no brains. Never could learn nothin'. Never could do nothin'. Nothin' will ever come out right for me."

"Who says so?" demanded Mr. McKenzie.

"My father."

"That so? Must be kind of an encouraging sort of fellow."

"Well," continued the boy, "I'm just like my uncle. He was that way, too. I look like him and act like him. He ended up by killin' a guy."

"Cal'culating to end that way, too?"

"I dunno. Pa says I'm the black sheep. I hadn't ought to have been born. They had enough with my brother and sister. My brother, he's the smart one. He's handsome and can do anything. But," and the boy's white face became dark and forbidding, "I hate him. He goes to college and will probably be President, but I'm the black sheep. Every family has its black sheep."

"Don't you believe it, kid," said Mr. McKenzie kindly. "There were seven kids in my family and they're a mighty good lot, every one of 'em."

I've raised five myself, and I haven't counted a black sheep among them yet, and the youngest is pretty near your age."

The boy's eyes brightened, then fell again.

"Can't help it," he said, "I'm the black sheep, just the same. I've run away, and quite resignedly, I suppose. I'll just naturally go to lazarus, same as my uncle did."

"I tell you what, kid," said Mr. McKenzie confidentially, "you come home with me and spend the night with my family. Then wire your folks in the morning where you are. I kind of like you, son. You've got stuff in you. I need a good hand in the packing room, if you can take on the job. Perhaps you could go to evening school, if you've a mind to, and work up to help me run the old joint. How about it?"

The boy's face was a study. He rose to his full six feet of height. Mr. McKenzie rose to the occasion, too. The boy was fully as tall as the man, although he was not so many feet of diameter to boot of it.

"Do you mean that, sir?" he asked. "Please don't kid me or try to put anything over on me."

"My hand on it," replied Mr. McKenzie. "But remember, there's no black sheep around here."

"Never fear," said the boy, throwing his head back and meeting the man's eyes squarely, "I'll remember. Lancaster Sheridan will never do another thing of which you need be ashamed. I will make good."

And he did, too.

Brain Highly Departmentalized The brain is highly departmentalized in its operations. Stimuli, or signals, coming from the nerves on the body's surface or from the sense organs, can reach only particular areas of the brain. When they are registered in this area, the brain mechanisms get busy and send secondary signals to other areas over the integrating, or intercommunication systems in the thalamus, the white matter in the frontal lobes and other structures having similar purpose.

Replicas and Reproduction The word replica is often wrongly used. A replica of a work is an exact copy made by the maker of the original work, and is considered as an original itself. Copies of the work made by other people or by machinery are copies, reproductions or duplicates, but they are not replicas.—Tit-Bits Magazine.

Teak Has Great Durability Teak has great strength, elasticity and remarkable durability. It is not very hard, is easily worked and takes a beautiful polish. Once seasoned, it does not crack, shrink, split or alter its shape.

Plutonium Gland Controls Height Your height is determined by the activity of your pituitary gland. This is an acorn-shaped gland which lies in the brain. It works in unison with your other glands, and pours its secretion directly into your blood stream. It not only controls your height but it also increases the force of your heart-beats and blood pressure. If this gland is not secreting normally—in other words, if it is diseased—a condition either of hyper-plutonium or of hypo-plutonium results. Hyper-plutonium, says a writer in Pearson's London Weekly, means overgrowth—the seven or eight-foot man or woman. Hypo-plutonium means the dwarf—the three or four-foot man or woman.

KENTUCKY THE LONG AGO

Clothing of the Pioneer Woman
No woman in American history has been more admired than our Pioneer Woman and none since Mother Eve has had less written about her clothes.

The Pioneer Woman came to Kentucky during the period of the Revolutionary War, when America was fashion-made; when the extremes of rich and plain attire in women's wardrobes were most strongly marked.

After Kentucky became a state and danger of Indians was over, a wave of prosperity made it possible for the pioneers to indulge their families in the luxuries of life to which they had been accustomed before coming to the wilderness.

The rustling black taffeta with its thread lace collar and exquisitely dainty undergarments, was worn immediately after the Revolution.

One of the most durable materials woven of flax was called fustian and was used for hard service by the men and boys of the home as well as by the slaves.

MASTERS' NEW IMPROVED 1938 PLANT SETTER

There is excellent reason for Masters' leadership in the plant setting industry, for it was Masters who built the first practical automatic plant setter over forty years ago. Since then it has been continually improved. Our 1938 model is the last word—it has no equal in the world.

Tobacco buyers say they can tell when a crop has been planted with a Masters' by its uniform high quality. They gladly pay highest prices for this fine yield. One man can set 1,000 to 1,500 plants a day and do it without even a crick in his back. Once you use the Masters' you will never be satisfied with any other method of plant setting. Masters' Improved Plant Setter is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction in setting.

Livestock Producers Meeting

A meeting sponsored by the Farm Bureau, livestock committee cooperating with the Producers Cooperative Commission Association, Cincinnati, was held at Independence on Thursday, Feb. 17th. W. Haden Ware, Chairman of the Committee presided at the meeting.

The 1938 outlook was discussed and illustrated by charts by E. A. Johnson, Marketing Specialist from the College of Agriculture, Lexington. Mr. Johnson pointed out how livestock production moves in cycles and also how prices received for farm livestock also moves in cycles depending upon the supply of livestock and the business conditions and purchasing power of the consumer in the cities where farm products are sold.

Mr. Johnson mentioned a recent circular, No. 303, entitled "Prices and Market Suggestions for Kentucky Stock Men." A copy of this circular may be obtained from the Experiment Station at Lexington, by any livestock producer who is interested in studying livestock marketing.

Farm Organization Discussed
H. E. Berge, Field Representative from the Producers outlined the importance of various farm organizations like the Farm Bureau, Cooperative Market Association, Production Credit Association and other farm organizations working to improve farm conditions for the farmer.

After the speaking program, Mr. Ware, Mr. Berge and Mr. Schurter issued refund checks to the producers present at the meeting. Refund checks not delivered will be mailed to the producers in the near future according to a statement made by Mr. Berge.

Livestock Tour Planned

A number of the producers are planning a livestock tour. It is planned in the latter part of April. Livestock producers who desire more information about the tour may leave their name and address with W. Haden Ware at Independence.

In the discussion during the meeting it was pointed out that pasture improvement through the use of limestone, phosphate and legume mixtures was an essential part of a good economical livestock program. According to recommendations of the County Planning Committee there is a need for earlier seeding of small grains and the use of lime and phosphate to increase the cover crop value during the winter and to insure more early pasture for lambs and other livestock in the spring.

Tobacco Meeting Scheduled

Feb. Early in March

Russell Hunt, Tobacco Specialist from the Agronomy Department, College of Agriculture, is scheduled to meet with tobacco growers in the County early in March. The purpose of the meeting will be to study growing, housing, curing and handling of tobacco to make a quality leaf such as the market desires today.

College of Agriculture, Extension Division, suggests Seeding Mixture. The University of Kentucky College of Agriculture offers the following recommendations to farmers who plan to seed pasture and meadow mixtures this spring:

HERE'S A Good Buy

WHEN YOU'RE SAYING Good-bye!

Why not go the Comfortable way, on the L. & N.? You travel surely... swiftly... safely. Soft beds, the finest of meals, attentive service, air-conditioning... all combine for your comfort. No other form of transportation offers you so much, for so little. Let us do the driving, next trip you take.

All seedlings should be composed of mixtures of grasses and legumes. Such mixtures will not only produce more and better feed, but will conserve the soil. Lespedeza should be included in all mixtures, as it adds feed value and insures against complete failure.

When grasses and legumes are seeded in connection with winter cover crops, it is desirable that the small grain be pastured in the spring. Rain growth of small grains after another young grasses and legumes.

Where pasture or meadow mixtures are to be seeded on especially prepared ground, a light seeding of oats may be sowed to provide protection to the young seedlings and to be mowed or grazed off before maturing.

Pasture and meadow production is greatly improved by the use of limestone and phosphate.

Suggested seedling mixtures:

1. Orchard grass, bluegrass, alsike clover and lespedeza.
2. Orchard grass, bluegrass, sweet clover and lespedeza.
3. Alfalfa, bluegrass, orchard grass and lespedeza.
4. Red clover, any grass or grasses and lespedeza.
5. Redtop, timothy, alsike clover and lespedeza.

OLD-AGE BENEFITS PAYMENTS INCREASE

The amounts which are being paid out as lump-sum benefits under the Social Security Act are increasing steadily in the Covington, Ky., district, according to Frank B. Decker, Jr., Manager of the office in the Copping Bldg. According to report recently received from the Social Security Board in Washington, claims for lump-sum payments under the old-age insurance plan of the Social Security Act were certified during January at the rate of 942 per working day. Mr. Decker stated that six months ago, in August, the daily rate was 165 from which level it climbed steadily through September, October, November and December, the successive average daily rates for each month being 228, 363, 381 and 590.

During January a total of $745,891 was certified for payment to 23,538 claimants—workers who reached the age of 65 and the estates of workers who died. The average amount of each payment was $31.68, or almost double the average of $17.00 for August. Pennsylvania with 2,929 headed the list in number of claims certified but the greatest amount of money went to New York where $97,175 was distributed among 2,768 claimants. The State with the highest average—$39.24—was New Jersey, where 1,144 claims were certified.

The largest claim that has been certified went to an employee who reached the age of 65. He received a lump-sum payment in January of $525. The largest death claim certified was $420.

Since the Government's old-age insurance plan went into effect on January 1, 1937, $2,028,207 has been certified for payment to 76,775 claimants. Each of the claims paid amounts to 3 1/2 percent of the total wages paid to workers.

Claims are now being paid to workers who reach the age of 65, after having been employed in fields covered by the Social Security Act. They are also being paid to the heirs of those who have died after having been employed in this manner, Mr. Decker stated.

NEW HAVEN HOMEMAKERS

A Homestead which at the turn of the past century was the domicile of the famous Culpepper clan of Virginia, was the scene of study and hospitality when the New Haven Homemakers met for their monthly meeting last Friday with Mrs. Sam Sleet. This was the last assembly under the guidance of Mrs. John Taylor, and Mrs. Jake Cleek, who have so efficiently acted as leaders.

Mrs. Walter Pennington and Mrs. R. M. Baldwin were chosen to take charge of the new project, Food Preparation, a subject which has already aroused much interest in the membership.

Dinner was served in the west room, where a grate fire burned, dispelling the damp and gloomy weather outside. Immediately after dinner the meeting was turned over to Mrs. Sleet, who acted in her capacity as County president, and introduced Mrs. Clinton Blankenbaker, who gave highlights on the convention at Lexington, during Farm and Home week.

Among the guests were Mrs. Matie Griffith and Mrs. Kate Wilson.

AFTER THOUGHTS

By GEORGE

This week dear Readers (if we have such) we would like for you to meet the new editor of our publication. Mr. and Mrs. James H. Jump, meet the readers of the Advertiser. Mr. Jump will be the editor and publisher and his wife will be the associate editor. He will endeavor to give the readers every bit of news and wants all of the cooperation that the public can give him. Omon folks let's give the new owner and editor a big hand. Thanks a lot.

Those Who stayed home on Friday, February 25th and missed the fracas between the Bearcats and the Juggernauts certainly missed the kind of basketball folks often write home about. It was a great game from all angles, it had its good and its bad basketball. The good kind over shadowed the bad. The lead changed hands three times but neither team held more than a six point advantage and that was in the first quarter. After the game was either team's up until the whistle blew.

The memory of our smiling Governor seems to be lapsing on him when it comes to remembering the name of our Senior senator from Kentucky, but our guess is that it will all come back to him before the primary.

It seems as though Thomas S. Rhea has let go with both hands and finally fell off the fence, when he endorsed Senator Barkley. There was not much else he could do.

Sunday will be the last stand of the Unique Theatre. There will be a motion picture until the opening of the new James. So ladies and gentlemen, you will all have to save your money, while you are staying at home playing with Junior and listening to the radio, so you can attend the opening of the new James for which no definite date has been set. For further details read your local newspaper.

It might have happened to me. Every since the award plan has been in effect in the Fire Department Walton Vest has been at every one of the meetings until the one Monday night, and what do you think Mr. Vest's name proved to be the winner and he was not present. The moral of this is never to miss a fire meeting—as it might happen to you.

The firemen will have a basketball game with the CCC camp on Friday, March 18th for the purpose of raising funds for additional equipment. We would like to see a number of friends and patrons and well wishers attend this game. Come out and show the boys that you appreciate their efforts, it will be time well spent.

A prominent person receives pay for endorsing most anything, but a note. With this list of philosophy we say so long until next week.

Relief From Detail

In a time of stress—it is well to be relieved of all troublesome detail. Here you may select the service most suited to your individual taste and pocketbook—and rest assured that the final tribute will be performed in a most faultless and praiseworthy manner.

Waste Materials On the Farm

Can Be Used To Control Erosion And Improve Wildlife

Waste materials about the farm often can be used to good advantage in controlling soil erosion and at the same time improving wildlife conditions, according to Ward T. Darnell, superintendent CCC camp SC8-5-Ky.

Crop residues, weeds, dead grass brush, and other forms of vegetation shield the soil from the rain and after decay add valuable organic matter to the soil, Mr. Darnell said. He warned against the usual practice of burning or discarding vegetable wastes about the farm which simply means the unnecessary loss of a valuable asset.

Vegetation is of vital importance to farm wildlife, he pointed out. The lives of most game birds and animals depend upon an adequate supply of food and enough cover in which to hide from their enemies. Branches trimmed from trees during timber operations, prunings from the orchard, or any brush cut in necessary clearings may be destroyed, the superintendent declared. When piled up near natural standing cover, brush will continue to serve as shelter for beneficial mammals and birds for two to five years after it is cut.

Technicians at the camp, which is operated by the Soil Conservation Service, have invited farmers to visit the camp and see how these so-called waste materials may be put to good use.

Waffle Supper Tuesday Night Well Attended

To Be Held At Florence Gym., March 3, 4, and 5

The eyes of the basketball lovers in Boone County will be turned on Florence, this week, where the 33rd District basketball tournament will be played. The Boone County classic will get under way on Thursday evening, and following sessions will be held on Friday evening, Saturday afternoon and the final on Saturday evening.

The first and second teams of the county will participate, with the first string winners and runners-up, going to the Regional at the Covington High hardwood the following week end.

The Hebron Cardinals and the Walton-Verona Bearcats ended the season's play in the Boone County Conference tied for first place, and are expected to make things plenty tough for opposing quintettes in the tourney. Tournaments are noted for upsets and anything can happen and sometimes does, but we predict that the Cardinals and Bearcats will square off against each other in the final Saturday night. We are not going any farther out on the limb to predict the winner, but if we when, these teams tangle, a thriller can be expected—so all you fans better get set.

In the second teams division, the play may not be as good, but our guess is that it may prove just as exciting and these lads are going to add a lot to the meet. Of course the second stringers won't get it to go to the Regional (unless members of the first team squad) but the boys will really "give," and these games will be well worth seeing.

The tournament schedule follows: Thursday evening, March 3rd—Florence vs Walton, 8 p. m., second teams; New Haven vs Hebron 9 p. m., first teams; Hamilton vs Walton, 10 p. m., first teams. Friday evening, March 4th—Hamilton vs Burlington, 8 p. m., second teams; Florence vs winner New Haven-Hebron game, 9 p. m., first teams; Burlington vs winner Hamilton-Walton game, 10 p. m., first teams.

Saturday afternoon, March 5th—New Haven vs winner Florence-Walton game, 2:30 p. m., second teams; Hebron vs winner Hamilton-Burlington game, 3:30 p. m., second teams.

Saturday evening, March 5th—Finals in second team division at 8:00 p. m.

Finals in first team division at 9:00 p. m. (All times given are Eastern Standard—remember that). Admission prices for the tournament are to be 20 and 35 cents. Plan now to attend. The tournament management, as well as the players will be pleased to have you present. We'll be seeing you.

THE FUNERAL OF F. E. STEPHENSON

Held At Baptist Church, Tuesday Afternoon at 2 P. M.

Frank Ellis Stephenson, age 67 passed away Sunday afternoon, February 27th, about 2 o'clock at his home on North Main street, Walton. The remains were removed to the Chambers & Grubbs Funeral Home for preparation, and laid in state there until Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock, then conveyed to the Walton Baptist Church, of which he was a member, where funeral services were conducted by Rev. A. K. Johnson of Palmouth, Ky., assisted by Rev. C. J. Alford, the local pastor. Many relatives and friends were in attendance for the rites, after which the body was laid to rest in the Walton Cemetery.

Mr. Stephenson is survived by his widow, Mrs. Nannie Merrill Stephenson; a son, John E. Stephenson of Walton; a daughter, Mrs. Earl Spanton; a sister, Mrs. Zella Frazier; six brothers, Forrest, Raymond, Thomas, Charles, Floyd and Johnson Stephenson; three grandchildren and a number of other relatives who deeply mourn his going.

The pallbearers were W. B. Johnson, Wash Readnor, John Roberts, L. F. Chapman, Dr. R. E. Ryle and C. W. Ransler.

The deceased was a retired carpenter, and had lived in Walton a number of years, moving here from Kenton County. He was a true Christian gentleman, a good friend and neighbor, and his sudden death was a great shock to all who knew him.

Personally we knew Mr. Stephenson quite well and we admired and liked him a great deal, and we wish to express our deepest sympathy to the bereaved family.

Chambers & Grubbs had charge of funeral arrangements.

Nat. Used Car Exchange Week

To Be Participated In By 466,000 Automobile Dealers

NEW YORK, Feb. 27.—A national drive to sweep the American automobile industry out of the current recession and stimulate American business generally was announced here today by Alvan Macauley speaking for every American automobile manufacturer and the nation's 46,000 automobile dealers.

The campaign, to be known as "National Used Car Exchange Week" and scheduled for March 5 to 12, is an outgrowth of recent conference at the White House between President Roosevelt and leaders of the automobile industry, Mr. Macauley said. The President has been advised of plans for the campaign, which is the first cooperative effort ever undertaken in which all American automobile manufacturers have taken part.

The campaign is timed at the outset of the spring selling season when both new and used cars usually begin to move in greatest volume, Mr. Macauley said. It is aimed primarily at stimulating the disposal of used car stocks now in dealers hands. Once this is accomplished, a substantial increase in car manufacturing schedules and employment of wage earners in the automobile factories is anticipated.

New Owner For The Advertiser

James H. Jump, Elizabethtown Takes Over Control

James H. Jump, 34, Elizabethtown, Ky., took over control of the Advertiser, March 1st. The sale of the paper was made last week by the widows of the former owners, the late R. D. Stamler and J. R. Wallace who died a short time ago.

Mr. Jump was born and reared in Elizabethtown and was graduated from the Elizabethtown High School. He attended Georgetown (Ky.) College and Detroit (Mich.) College.

He began his career as a printer with the Peeters Printing Company of Louisville, and from there went to Michigan, where he followed his trade. Following the death of his father in Kentucky, he returned to this state, where he worked on the Hart County News.

He will be associated in the active operating of the paper by his wife. Next week Mr. Jump will have a message for the readers.

To the Readers and Patrons of the Advertiser:—

Before this issue of the Walton Advertiser reaches you, all financial interest in this paper will be transferred by the present owners to others.

Severing our relations with the Advertiser is a sad blow indeed, but our readers will know of our misfortune.

For twenty-three years it has been an inspiration, not only to ourselves but to our departed loved ones.

We have watched, with much pleasure, the growth of this paper from an half sheet to its present size and splendidly equipped plant. We realize without the loyal support of our readers and patrons this progress could not have been accomplished. And for that support we wish to express our deep and sincere appreciation.

While our financial interest in the paper is no more, it still has and will always have our best wishes and loyal support.

To our readers, patrons and friends we hope and trust that you will give to the new owner, J. H. Jump the loyal support that you so kindly gave us.

Mr. Jump comes to us highly recommended as a gentleman and having extensive experience in larger plants.

Again we wish to express our appreciation and sincere thanks.

Founder's Day Program of P. T. A.

The Joint Founders Day Program of P. T. A., held at Simon Kenton High School and participated in by the contributing grade schools of Independence, Piner and Visalia, was well attended, interesting and entertaining. Mrs. Dora Orutcher, chairman of the program committee at Simon Kenton, assisted by the program chairmen from the other schools, presented the following:

Three minute address by R. E. Sharon, Superintendent, and by each of participating principals. Each gave his ideals for the work of the P. T. A. A short sketch was given by eight officers of the P. T. A. of the different schools. Musical selections showing much preparation were presented by the Hi Glee Club, the combined grade school Glee Clubs and the High School band which is a new organization, of which we are quite proud. A reading, "School Time," was given by M. Farmer, Jr., and the evening closed with a showing of pictures of last spring's flood. Then we all departed for home in the rain.—Pub.

Burlington Infant Chokes to Death

Frantic Mother Breaks Window To Summon Help

A two-year old son of a Boone county farmer choked to death Monday on a grain of corn.

The victim, David Robert Jones, was picked up the death pellet while playing on the floor at his home on the Burlington-Belleview pike, three miles north of Burlington, Boone county seat.

His mother, Mrs. Mary Jones, made a frantic effort to assist the child. Unable to dislodge the grain of corn, the mother, carried the choking child across a field to the home of Mrs. Harry May, former nurse, where there is a telephone.

Mrs. May was not at home and Mrs. Jones was unable to gain access to the May home, so she removed one of her shoes and broke out a window. She telephoned Dr. M. A. Yelton, who responded but the child died just as the physician arrived.

The body was removed to Chambers & Grubbs funeral home, where it was prepared for burial.

Funeral services were conducted at the Burlington Methodist church Wednesday, March 3rd, at 2 p. m. with Rev. R. R. Rose officiating. Burial in I. O. O. F. cemetery.

The child is survived by its father and mother; one sister, Beryl Josephine; one brother, James M. Jones.

Chambers & Grubbs had charge of the arrangements.

By MAOL-CHOLM

WALTON SCORES IMPRESSIVE 32 TO 30 WIN OVER ERLANGER

The largest crowd of the season was present at the local hardwood last Friday night, when the Bearcats attacked the Juggernauts from Lloyd High of Erlanger. The Cats were well primed for this tilt and the results were amazing. "Our boys" completely up-ended the old dope bucket and registered a thrilling two-point win, which left the spectators breathless from cheering and excitement.

The game was one of the closest ever witnessed by these fading eyes. The largest margin was a 6 to 0 lead held by Walton for a short time in the opening quarter, but after that a one or two point margin was quite a lead. The first period ended with the Cats in front 7 to 6, and at half intermission held an advantage of 15 to 14. The third quarter ended with the locals on the long end of a 20 to 18 count. The nip-and-tuck affair continued in the final frame but W.-V. was able to have a 32 to 30 edge as the game ended. The winners played inspired ball and were the match for the invaders a every turn.

Clinton Henry, Lloyd center, who Walton is proud to have started on a basketball career topped all scorers in the game with 16 points. Osborn, the Cats high-scoring pivot, rang up 15 points for his team, and Pennington was next with 8.

In the preliminary game, the Cubs lost a close and exciting 23 to 22 game to the Erlanger Reserves. Darnell did his best to "bring home the bacon," by scoring 16 points for the Cubs, but his efforts were in vain.

CATS END SEASON WITH 33 TO 30 WIN OVER OWENTON

Coach Lins took his boleros Bearcats to Owenton, Saturday night where they rang down the curtain on the '37-'38 season, with a 38 to 30 victory over the Owen County lads.

Walton took the lead early in the scuffle and maintained it throughout. Osborn tallied 20 points for the victors. "Os" has scored 101 points (Continued on last page)

Nobody paid any attention to the body on the floor.

Pender had interrupted. The games resumed. Sounds of voices, the rattle of chips, the spinning of roulette wheels filled the room. Wild Bill Pender's adventure was finished business.

Jeff Gray took temporary leave of absence. He had to explain to a girl probably sick with fear that the shooting had nothing to do with her father.

CHAPTER II

The cowboy Sid stood in the doorway of the store.

"Job for you, Sanger," he said. "Yellow bumped off in the Golden Nugget."

Jeff Gray shouldered past him toward the white-faced girl leaning against the counter. "It's all right, Miss Chiswick," the red-headed man told her cheerfully. "Nobody hurt but Pender."

"Who was sure shot into rag dolls?" Sid asked.

Ruth relaxed limply as the blood poured back into her frozen heart. "I thought . . . I was afraid," she murmured, the words dying in her throat.

"Help me carry this stretcher, Sid," requested Sanger. He was coroner and undertaker. In Tall Holt the first of these positions was honorary, but the other was no sinecure.

"Did you tell my father I am here?" Ruth asked.

"Haven't had a chance yet," Gray answered. The other two men were leaving with the stretcher. He continued, lowering his voice: "Mr. Chiswick came to town about some rustling."

"And doesn't know about . . . me?"

"I couldn't say."

"What is he doing in the Golden Nugget?"

"Serving notice that he is on the warpath against rustlers."

"The eyes of the girl opened wide. 'To that gang in there?'"

"Looked to me like some of them were sull about it," he conceded. "Lucky for him Pender picked that time to cut loose his wolf. The boys got the finger-titch out of their systems. I reckon it's going to be all right now. Howard seems to be the big boss, and he is making peace talk."

"Father is so bull-headed."

Gray asked for information, reluctantly. This was none of his business, but he had been dragged into it. "This young Howard—any kin to Sherman Howard?"

A flag of color fluttered in her cheeks, but her dark eyes held steadily to his. "Sun," she said. Then, sharply, "Why do you ask?"

"If you aim to tell yore father about this little thing maybe you had better get him out of town first," he suggested.

There was a slurring drawl in his speech that stirred anger in her. Clearly he disapproved of what she had done. She did not want to affront the young man who flattered around her, but she objected to being made the victim of cool contempt.

"I'm grateful to you for your advice, sir, and I'm sure Father will be," she said, the sting of a small whiplash singing in her voice.

He disregarded her tone. Apparently he was as oblivious of her annoyance as he was of the pristine glamor of her vital youth.

"Bull-headed was the word you used," he went on evenly. "It suits Lee Chiswick fine. When Pender busted into the Golden Nugget, yore father was reading the riot act to a dozen scoundrels waiting for the signal to cut loose at him."

"Whose signal?" she asked, the blood driven from her face.

"Seemed to be Sherman Howard's say-so. Get me right. I'm playing my own hand, and I don't give a cuss whether you smile or snap. I'll tell the old man his dear daughter is here, and you can feed him any story you've a mind to, at any time. If he goes back across the road and gets rubbed out, it is none of my business."

She had lured it over boys with a high hand. That she could not break through his callousness irritated her. Surprisingly, she felt young and immature, was moved by an impulse to defend herself.

"I'm an advocate of what I've done," she said, bridling.

"That's nice. Tell him you came to town to buy a paper of pins."

"You're impudent."

He faced her anger with a long look of amused scorn, then turned away, insolently indifferent. The girl wanted to call him back, to lash out at him with petting words that would sting, but she was aware that nothing she could say would penetrate his impenetrable armor. His opinion of her had not been swayed by any personal pique.

Gray walked back into the gambling hall.

Sanger had the floor. "Who did this, Curly?" he asked.

Curly pushed a hand through his black hair. "Couldn't tell you for sure, Yell. Half a dozen of us took a crack at him. He rode in asking for trouble and got it. Blazed away with his rifle and handed in his checks pronto. Maybe you better make yore verdict read, committed suicide while temporarily insane."

Norris volunteered information, slanting a sneer at Chiswick. "No objections anywhere, I reckon. We can be bullied just so far."

"No objections from me," Sanger agreed.

"Pender came in on my horse Black Diamond, so if you want to make the killing more legal you can claim he was a horse-thief," Curly suggested humorously.

"Or self-defense," Sanger amended seriously.

"Who cares how legal it was?" Norris said. "No four-flusher can come in here and hurrah me."

Dan Brand recognized this as a personal challenge flung at his employer. "Only a crazy dog would try, Morg," he answered amiably.

"You don't need to be carrying a chip on yore shoulder, Morg," Howard said, with a warning glance. "If there is rustling going on, we all want to know about it."

"Did you say 'if there was any rustling'?" Chiswick inquired, harshly in his voice.

Howard looked without mirth. "You're hard to please, Chiswick. I don't pick my words like a professor. If you're not on the pro, as Brand claims, you sure have a funny way of being pleasant."

"Did I say I was aiming to be pleasant?" The cattlemen let to his hard gaze shift from Norris to Howard. "Someone ran off a bunch of 50 of our cows last night. If you expect me to grin and say, 'Help yourselves, boys,' you can have another guess. I'm going to fight."

"When a bull gets to pawing the ground he most generally gets a commended," Norris insisted, not shifting his narrowed gaze from the owner of the LC.

"Shut up, Morg," interposed Curly affably. "Can't expect a man to sit quiet while he is being stole blind. Tell you what, boys. Some of us will be heading into the hills soon. We'll keep our eyes skinned. Like as not some of us will spot this bunch of L.C. stuff."

"I wouldn't wonder if some of you did," Chiswick said bluntly.

The cattlemen turned to leave the saloon.

Gray stopped him with a gesture. "Just a moment, Mr. Chiswick."

"What you want?" the ranchman asked.

Gray lowered his voice. "There's a young lady over at Sanger's who says she is your daughter. She would like to see you right off."

"My daughter? What's she doing here?"

"Better ask her."

The red-headed man had nothing more to say. He turned to the bar and ordered a schooner of beer. Chiswick and his foreman walked out of the place.

Out of the corner of his mouth Mile High said to his chief, "That's the guy I was telling you about."

Howard nodded. He observed that Curly was sauntering to the bar. So was Norris.

The big black-haired man gave an order to the bartender. "A Curly select."

Selecting a bottle, the man in the white apron pushed it across the top of the bar. Curly poured a drink and tossed it down his throat.

Norris rolled a cigarette. "Tough on a guy taking a long ride," he said amiably to the stranger.

"Sure is," agreed Gray.

"Expect you're spittin' cotton."

"I can stand a beer."

"In the cattle business?"

"More or less. At these odd right now."

Kinda looking around, said Curly. "This is Mr. Norris."

"Glad to meet you, I'm Jeff Gray. A stranger in these parts."

Norris rolled a cigarette. "Tough Nut is a good town," he said.

"Booming these days. Mines are doing fine. Plenty of money there."

"I'm not a miner."

"I'm recognizing the invitation to move on, but disregarding it. 'Fact is, I'm not much of a town man anyhow, except when I drift in to blow my savings. I've been in the cow business all my life."

"In Texas?" Norris asked with a casual manner.

"Here and there."

"Noticed when I was outside that you're riding a Brazos saddle. My choice, too, especially when I'm riding a long ways."

Gray remarked non-committally that a saddle made a lot of difference to a rider's comfort.

"Been dry in West Texas for quite a spell, I read," Curly volunteered.

"So the papers claim."

"I thought his callousness irritated her. Surprisingly, she felt young and immature, was moved by an impulse to defend herself."

"I'm an advocate of what I've done," she said, bridling.

The Fireside of the Pioneer Woman

The Pioneer Woman made her open fire-place her chief concern. It was not only the focal point of interest in her cabin, but also the most important factor in family subsistence. Dextrously she hung her hominy pot on the crane, put her pot hooks at a convenient angle, set her spider and trestle oven on the hearth, stood her tin-kitchen in the ashes on its own four legs, its back open to the fire for baking her hams and beans. Her waffle iron and other long-handled cooking utensils, leaned against the chimney jack beside the bellows, and lo, she was ready to cook three meals a day for her family.

Her menus included such delicacies as tarts, custards, berries, floating islands, bland mangoes, trifles, pies, puddings, mincemeat, sausages, succotash and cheeses. She roasted her chickens ducks, geese, pigs, beef and venison, over the blazing log fire on spits, or skewered them. When making her famous "Hasty Pudding" she set a dish of "Injun meal" on the hearth and from this took small fingerfuls and dropped the meal into the boiling pot, a few grains at a time. It had to be stirred the hour that it cooked. When it was done, she turned it into a "nappy" (as she called her vegetable dish) and served it with milk.

As bread is the staff of life, it is interesting to know how she baked her "rye-an-injun" bread. It was made of half rye and half Indian meal, the dough worked in a great wooden trencher and baked all day long on oak or cabbage leaves that lined the old brick oven. The long baking produced a very thick crust and made a delicious meal when softened with hot water and sweetened with maple syrup after a generous lump of butter had been added.

Her Johnny-cake, or Journey-cake was a quicker bread, baked either on her Johnny-cake-board or on a smooth clean stone, tilted before the fire.

Corn was the staple food of the pioneers. They could hardly wait for the young roasting ears to mature, so eager were they for the delicious morsel. Popped corn was a delight. Parched corn was carried by every hunter in the wallet of his smock. It was light in weight, easy to carry and nutritious. Every cabin had its hominy block. Cornpone and corn meal mush with milk, made an evening meal for little folks and when served with treacle, was a choice dessert.

The pioneer settler planted his orchard and welcomed Johnny Appleseed who came through Kentucky, carrying his deer-hide sack of apple seeds on his back. Thanks to him, there were good strains of apples for pioneer housewives, who used them freely during the summer and dried them for winter use.

When spring came, the pioneer woman betook herself to the woods and there sought the wild greens she called "sallets," old field mustard white top, lamb's quarter, dandelion, poke, dock, sheepsorrell, crowfoot, parsley, tonguegrass, wild pepper wild buckwheat, etc., and of these she made a savory dish.

The household utensils of the pioneer woman are as interesting as they are crude. For the most part they were of wood and the pioneer was an expert in his knowledge of woods and their use.

Troughs were made of maple burl or of poplar, as were the piggins with their single high stave to serve as handle and the noggin which had two, that, connected by a deer thong, made a good bucket. The wooden tankard whittled from one piece of wood, was passed from mouth to mouth, as we pass our loving cup. In some places a huge wooden trencher made of some lashed together was set in the middle of the crude table and each person at the table ate therefrom, but in Kentucky, the pioneer housewife demanded individual platters and the "dish-turner" became a person of consequence in each community. She prized these wooden utensils and in the settlement of estates we find listed her "skillet or dipper," her "skel" and "loose," (receptacles for holding her milk), her "noggin" and "piggins," trenchers, bowls and platters, her tubs and wheels.

Wooden spoons, ladles, rolling-pins, butter paddles and pudding sticks, whittled from the lovely red cherry; mortars and pestles for pounding salt and sugar, and herbs and roots for medicines.

Her cheese press as well as her wooden churn with its wooden dasher and long wooden handle were her pride and delight.

Added to these utensils were her gourd which she grew to great size and used for egg gourds, salt gourd, spout gourds, knitting gourds and for every other conceivable purpose mentionable and unmentionable.

The pioneer woman had some silver, a few nice pieces of copper and quite a bit of pewter as well. She loved the pewter because of its noisiness quality and because she had her own moulds and knew she could melt any pieces that were matted or battered and mould them over again.

The pioneers lived well even in their log-cabin days, and when prosperity and peace came to them their hospitality and delicious food made them famous.

Made-to-Order Weather in Studio

Assures Sonja's Finest Picture

TEMPERATURES of 105 to 110 degrees hit Hollywood in searing heat waves just as "Happy Landings," Sonja Henie's new film got under way at the Twentieth Century-Fox Studios.

In a single afternoon a dozen extra plots were photographed at one studio. Between "takes" performers and technicians rushed outdoors to "cool off" under the blistering rays of the California sunshine.

Miss Henie and her fellow-performers were the envy of every other player in Hollywood, for the scenes of her latest starring vehicle were filmed in an air conditioned building. Regardless of outdoor conditions, the indoor atmosphere, by the use of such equipment as the Air Conditioning Manufacturers' Association reports is increasingly popular for homes, stores and buildings of all sizes and kinds, was kept exactly suited to the needs of the little blonde star.

Skating was done on an ice rink 250 x 125 feet. The air conditioning equipment installed by Twentieth Century-Fox made it possible to keep the temperature and the humidity adjusted exactly to Miss Henie's tastes. Circulation of the air was regulated, too, so as to safeguard her from drafts.

The result of all this regard for the comfort and efficiency of the Norwegian skating marvel is a picture declared to surpass her first and second films in every respect.

Mrs. Emma Buchanan of Ind., and Mrs. Ella Story of this place, spent the week end with Mrs. Bea Story of near Warsaw.

Settled St. Augustine, Fla. In 1913 Ponce de Leon, in search of the Fountain of Youth, seems to have visited the site of St. Augustine. In 1564 a company of French Huguenots passed there and settled a few miles to the north on the St. Johns river. Don Pedro Menendez de Aviles was sent by Philip II of Spain to expel the intruders and erected a fort at St. Augustine, in August, 1565. Upon his return from the St. Johns settlement, he established a settlement at St. Augustine.

Between 1790 and 1930 the American standard of living was raised 400 per cent.

On May 25, 1838, congress made its last appropriation for the historic Cumberland road. Thus ended the federal government's sponsorship of a highway that had provided a vitally important communication link with the Middle West. Under authority of an act signed by President Jefferson in 1805, it had been built from Cumberland, Md., to Wheeling, W. Va., and was later extended through Ohio, Indiana and Illinois to St. Louis, Mo. Among the passenger and freight vehicles which passed to and fro over the road in an almost continuous stream, not the least colorful were the swift stages of the Great Western Express Mail, some of which ran on a schedule of ninety-four hours between Washington, D. C., and St. Louis.

Home Entered by Death Angel Feb. 23

Mrs. Nick Verborg, wife of Nick Verborg was born Sept. 11, 1887, and departed this life from those who loved her Feb. 23, 1938, at the age of 50 years.

She was the daughter of John J. and Sarah Alice Taylor, who preceded her to the grave many years ago.

She had been ill for several weeks with pneumonia at the Kentucky Baptist hospital where she died when God called her home.

Mrs. Verborg left to mourn her passing: a devoted husband and son, William Russell, who did all that could be done to make life pleasant and comfortable. Two sisters, Mrs. Lee Hamilton of Sanders, Mrs. Will H. A. I. of Warsaw, one nephew, six nieces; two great nieces, a host of other relatives and friends. She was a member of the Christian church at Louisville and had lived in Gallatin County until about 10 years ago moving Anchorage, Ky., where she now owns a beautiful nursery. The popularity of the Verborgs family and the esteem in which they were held by the people of Gallatin County was well attested to by presence of the large crowd that attended the funeral.

Funeral services were held at the Verborg home in charge of their pastor of Louisville church, after which the remains were laid to rest in the beautiful cemetery at Shelbyville.

There is much in death that we do not understand, but we will understand, "Sometime when life's lessons have all been learned." Reason stands abashed and is silent beside an open grave. Love scatters her flowers, and turns away while sympathy drapes her tears upon the coffin lid. But while earth's oracles are all dumb and her tongues are silent, omniscience has spoken from out the darkness and made plain in Jesus resurrection the mystery of the grave, the south wind remembers the mystic word that carsters. Mrs. Lee Hamilton of Sanders, Mrs. Will H. A. I. of Warsaw, one nephew, six nieces; two great nieces, a host of other relatives and friends. She was a member of the Christian church at Louisville and had lived in Gallatin County until about 10 years ago moving Anchorage, Ky., where she now owns a beautiful nursery. The popularity of the Verborgs family and the esteem in which they were held by the people of Gallatin County was well attested to by presence of the large crowd that attended the funeral.

Friends of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Johnson will be glad to hear that their son, Kenneth Edward, is rapidly recovering from injuries received when he was struck by a truck in front of his home here last week.

SCHOOL NEWS

The first three grades in the Walton-Vernon High School enjoyed a trip to Cincinnati last week. They saw Walt Disney's new "full-length" picture, "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs."

The high school boys are thinking seriously of forming a baseball club. The scouts had better be on the lookout. Some big league material may come to the surface.

All of the boys and girls in high school are members of either the Hi-Y Club or the Girl Reserves. Both of these clubs are carrying on Bible Study projects.

Mr. Powers Conrad won the Angel Food Cake at the basketball game Friday night. The Junior and Senior classes wish to thank those who supported them in the Cake Raffle. The money derived from this will help the Junior and Senior classes to go to Mammoth Cave after the end of school. This trip will be both educational and entertaining.

Hebron Defeats Walton 27-22 To Win District Basketball Tournament

In Thrilling Game At Florence, Saturday Night,
Before Record Crowd

WALTON CUBS WIN

Hamilton Places In The Second Teams
Division

Before a capacity crowd, estimated to be about 1,000, the Hebron Cardinals copped the 33rd District basketball crown, Saturday night at the Florence gym, by defeating the Walton-Verona Bearcats 27 to 22 in a thrilling and exciting contest.

The huge crowd was in an uproar from start to finish as the teams battled furiously to win first place in the county.

Honors were even until the third quarter, the score being knotted at 8-8 at the close of the first quarter and 12-12 at the half. In the third period Hebron pulled away to lead 18 to 14 as the final quarter opened and in the closing stanza held the edge and came through to annex the championship 27 to 22. This was the first time Hebron had ever won the District title, and for Walton, it was only the second time in seven years that they did not finish first and in these two instances they were the runner-up.

Osborn, Bearcat ace, led all scorers in the tilt, with 10 points, and Turner was high for Hebron with 9.

The Walton-Verona Cubs won the "B" team championship by defeating the Hamilton second team, 35 to 21 in the curtain-raiser, Saturday night.

This also, was quite an exciting skirmish and it was not until late in the game that Walton was able to pull away and show a comfortable margin.

Benson led the Cubs scoring with 14 points and Wood was best for the Hamiltonians with 10 markers.

Revival Begins at Methodist Church

Sunday, March 13th,
With Rev. G. B. Traynor
Doing the Preaching

A two weeks series of evangelistic services are to begin Sunday, March 13th, at the Walton Methodist Church. The preaching is to be done by Rev. G. B. Traynor, pastor of the Taylor's Street M. E. Church, South Newport, Ky. The Rev. Traynor was in charge of the Walton Methodist Church for three years, 1931-34 and was a very popular minister in the community. Doubtless his many friends will be glad of the privilege of hearing him again.

The congregational singing will be led by Rev. R. M. Baldwin, who is an experienced evangelist, singer and is now pastor of the Hughes Chapel and Big Bone Methodist Churches. The Hammond Organ with Mrs. J. B. Johnson at the console, is to be used in the instrumental music, along with the piano. Mrs. F. E. Bedinger will direct the choir in special numbers.

This is to be known as the "Aldersgate Revival" in commemoration of the two hundredth anniversary of the heart warming experiences of the Rev. John Wesley, human organizer of the Methodist Church.

The services will begin each evening at 7 o'clock and at 11:00 a. m. on Sunday mornings. The public is cordially invited.

The Ladies Aid Society of the Florence Christian Church are to give a fresh river fish dinner at the Florence Garage, Dixie Highway and Shelby Street, from 11 a. m. to 9 p. m. Saturday, March 12th. The price for this dinner will be 35c and the public is cordially invited.

This will be an all day meeting. Dinner will be prepared and served in the Church kitchen, and members will be asked to give a small amount to help pay for food.

There will be special features in the afternoon. One which should be very interesting, especially at this time will be "Spring Style Trends."

Name Your Favorite Basketball Players

Vote For Two From Your School to Play
In All-Star Game

Final arrangements have been made for the playing of a basketball game between two selected teams of Boone County boys. The Boone County Athletic Conference is sponsoring the game in the interest of better basketball and the success of the Conference. Two players from each of the six high schools will make up the twelve players.

In order that the boys chosen from each school may be selected impartially, it has been decided to have the basketball fans in the County choose them by vote. For this purpose, a ballot is printed below on which you are to write the names of the two players of your choice from your school. This means the fans living in the Walton-Verona district will vote for two players on the Walton-Verona high school team, those living in the New Haven district will vote for two in that school, and so on through the county. Only two players can be voted upon by any individual. This means that you will vote only for players from the school in the district which is your home.

By this means each community will have equal representation in the game. Such a plan will do much to create better school spirit, since at least three schools will be represented on each of the all-star teams. The teams will be selected by the Conference committee by a process of drawing and should result in a well-matched pair of teams. A close game should be played by the best players in the schools of the county.

The game will be played on the Florence floor on a night to be selected the week following the Regional Tournament. This means that you must get your ballot in to the Advertiser by mid-night of March 12th. Anyone may vote in this contest, but only one vote may be cast by an individual as stated above.

Fill out the ballot below and mail it to the Advertiser before mid-night of Saturday, March 12th. Don't forget the date and be too late.

Editor Walton Advertiser:

(Write the name of your school) School to play in the All-Star game are:

Special Notice!

All the members of the Walton Methodist Congregation are urged to be present as a very special meeting at 7 o'clock, Friday night of this week, including all the official members, stewards, trustees, etc. This service has been postponed from Wednesday night to Friday night and has to do with the Aldersgate Commemoration and a preparation for the approaching evangelistic services. It is strictly devotional in nature. Please let every one make a very special effort to be present!

AFTER THOUGHTS

It will not be so long now that we will have spring weather at least we hope so. Spring is supposed to begin the 21st day of this month. Some of the gardeners have already started to sow their radish seeds and cutting their potatoes to be ready for St. Patrick's Day, which is by the way, is a week from today.

Oh, yes, the Tournament. It happened didn't it? Yes I sure did. The Bearcats just eased out of winning and finally I think, made the final had something to do about it, don't you? The Bearcats drew Newport in the Regional which began last night and will play tonight. Here's wishing and hoping.

"Happy Chandler told all of those present that within the next two years, something will be done but he would not be here to help do it. At least we are all hoping that we can soon see some results for this highway" is an awful condition.

Just as a reminder don't forget that the Volunteer Firm will play a benefit basketball game with the local OCCC Camp and the Independent team from New Haven, Friday night March 18th, also as an added attraction there will be a $200 cash door prize. Pretty Wedding Solemnized Sunday

At The Hickory Grove
Baptist Church—
500 Are Present

The marriage of Miss Gaynelle Summey of Independence to Mr. Leo Flynn, son of Mrs. Emma Flynn of Walton was solemnized with simple dignity and beauty Sunday afternoon, March 6, before 500 relatives and friends. Preceding the ceremony music was rendered by Miss Elizabeth Daman, with Mrs. Ena May singing "Ah, Sweet Mystery of Life," and "Oh Promise Me." Lohengrin wedding march by Miss Sabre Sullivan.

Evergreen and gladioli artfully arranged around the altar with standing canals at either side created an exquisite effect. Before the groom and his best man, Mr. Raymond Stevenson took their places with Rev. Shirley Sparsh the officiating clergyman. Mr. George Armstrong, Alton House, R. C. Summey and Earl Bolus, who were ushers, stretched a white carpet from the altar to the door for the entrance of the bridal party.

Leading the way for the bride was the bride's maid, Miss Marie Armstrong, followed by Miss Sabre Sullivan, a cousin of the bride.

They were gowning identically in a gorgeous shade of turquoise blue silk voile over more tulle with fitted bodice which had a row of tiny buttons down the front and finished with a narrow rounded collar. The sleeves were short with twelve rows of tiny ruffles. Juliet oase of the blue material and they wore completed the costume. They carried bouquets of yellow tulips.

Immediately preceding the bride were the flower girls, Rose Marie Peay and Betty Lou Veith, second cousins of the bride, both very pretty and attractive little girls with long blonde curls on which they wore large white ribbons. Their dresses were adorable, of anklet length turquoise blue silk voile with a white waist and ruffles around the hem of the dress. They carried bouquets of rose petals.

The bride entering on the arm of her father, she wore a gown of white silk voile, the full skirt ended in a point at the fitted bodice which had a row of tiny pearl buttons down the front and finished with a narrow rounded collar. The sleeves tapered to points at the wrist. She wore lovely earrings which were a family heirloom. Her veil which was cape length was caught to her hair with tiny pearls. Her bridal bouquet was white snapdragons and baby breath.

After the double ring ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Summey, who with Mrs. Emma Flynn, formed the receiving line with the bride and groom and their attendants to welcome the guests.

Following later wedding supper for bridal party, family and other guests.

As the bride and groom washed out amid a shower of rice a glimpse was caught of Mrs. Flynn's smart blue suit, blue hat and blue accessories. They left by motor for a short trip to points south and will be at home to their many friends on Stevenson Road, Walton March 11th.

Tobacco Growers Learn About Growing Quality Tobacco

Russell Hunt, tobacco specialist from the College of Agriculture, at Lexington, met with over 200 Kenton County tobacco growers to study the factors that influence the growing of quality tobacco.

Mr. Hunt stated that much land is planted to tobacco that is not suited for tobacco. He sighted examples of how good tobacco on few acres produced more income than many acres of low grade tobacco.

A good blue-grass sod is desirable for good tobacco.

Ground should be plowed in March. On the yellow ridge soils of the county, phosphate should be used. Phosphate should also be applied where stable manure is used in order to balance the plant food element. Phosphate is an important factor in maturing the plant.

Plant Beds
Mr. Hunt also recommended that complete fertilizer be used on plant beds to provide the necessary plant food elements for the young plants.

Plant Bed Diseases
The Extension Division has a leaflet on tobacco plant bed diseases that every farmer should study. Plant beds should be changed each year to avoid disease. Old beds harbor the disease and insects.

The cutting, handling, housing, firing and curing of tobacco was illustrated by moving pictures at the Seeding Plant Beds.

Mr. Hunt pointed out that most growers use too many seeds on their beds. Too many seeds make spindling plants. Less seed per plant bed will make healthier and stronger plants to set in the field. 2 1/2 standard teaspoons will sow a bed 100 by 9 feet.

Tobacco Barns
Another important factor in growing quality tobacco is proper barns. The right amount and kind of ventilation is necessary to produce quality tobacco.

Circular No. 279, Ventilation of Tobacco Barns prepared by Mr. Hunt and J. B. Brooks, College of Agriculture gives important information.

A Shortcake for the Main Course

By BEULAH V. GILLASPIE
Director, Sealtell Laboratory Kitchen

THESE early Spring days call for variety in the meal, to spur the lagging appetite, and here's a luscious dish that guests or family will delight in—easy to prepare, and so nutritious. The following recipe may suggest other types of shortcakes, too, that will serve as interesting "main dishes."

ASPARAGUS SHORTCAKE
2 cups milk
1 large bunch asparagus (about 24 stalks)
4 tablespoons butter
6 tablespoons flour

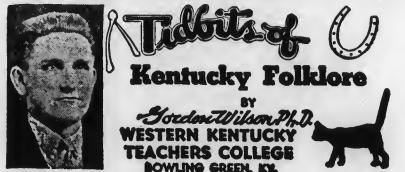

Wash the asparagus and peel tough ends. Cut off the tips and cut the stalks in small pieces. Cook pieces and tips separately in boiling salted water. Melt the butter, add the flour and mix well. Add milk and asparagus stock and cook, stirring constantly, until thickened. Add salt, pepper and asparagus pieces. Roll out biscuit dough and cut with doughnut cutter into 12 rounds. Bake in hot oven (425°F.) for 12 to 15 minutes. Put creamed asparagus pieces between two rounds and in the center. Dip asparagus tips in melted butter and put in centers of shortcakes. Serves six.

What Is A Trifle—

A loose thread, a lost minute, a penny more or less? Any of these things may lead to unexpected but important consequences.

Just how important is the penny? The ads in this paper give you a good illustration. The pennies you save, multiplied by the minutes you gain, will become savings that mount into the dollars. These are trifles worth while.

OLD-FASHIONED FATHERS
It is easy to place a halo around the heads of the fathers of yesterday, particularly after we have forgotten or forgiven their faults. When we stop to think the matter over, we must recognize that the old-fashioned father suited his own time and place but would be an anachronism in our time.

We of my generation grew up under the shadow and the light of the Civil War. Most of the fathers had been in the army or had helped on the farm while older brothers and even fathers marched way to the battlefields. The thrill of the war lasted down until 1900 at least. Ulysses and his men who strove with gods could hardly have felt any greater pride in their achievements than did these ex-soldiers or these younger brothers of men who laid down their lives for what they believed to be right. The military organization of the army was transferred to the family: the boys came or went at the father's commands like the servants of the great man in the Bible. One did not ask or probably wonder why. Again like some one in the Bible, the fathers of yesterday did not spare the rod.

The old-fashioned father, in spite of his limited education, had plenty to talk about. Politics formed a large part of every conversation when visitors came. The stirring times of Reconstruction made every one alive to political events. Then there was always the subject of religion to discuss, not that any one might be convinced, but to enlighten times. My own father was a Presbyterian and could be rather neutral in our neighborhood, where everybody else belonged to the Methodist, the Baptist, or the Christian Church. When politics or religion stirred up too much feeling, he could always start the conversation in the direction of the Civil War, a topic on

The "Mormon Battalion"
On July 20, 1846, the "Mormon Battalion" began, at Kanesville (now Council Bluffs), Ia., a march which, in part, was later to be followed by a transcontinental railway and thus was to mark the way for one of the great lines of communication between the Atlantic and the Pacific. Many of the men—who, says one writer, presented an appearance which was "half-patriarchal, half-military"—were accompanied by their wives and children. Striking southwest, they crossed the perilous desert between the Arkansas and the Cimarron and entered Santa Fe early in October. Leaving the women and children here, the battalion set out for California and, after overcoming innumerable difficulties, reached San Diego late in January, 1847.

Odors Easily Detected
No sense is so sensitive as the sense of smell, according to Dr. Ivo Griffith, writing in the American Journal of Pharmacy, publication of the Philadelphia College of Pharmacy and Science. He says camphor can be detected in a dilution of one part in 400,000; musk one in 8,000,000, and vanilla one in 10,000,000. A good sniffer can detect one billionth of an ounce of attar of roses and one trillionth of an ounce of ethyl mercaptan (rotten egg odor).

YES, that's what we like to call ourselves because it's just eighty-eight years ago that we moved in. We bought some property then, laid some rails, and did some building here, and since that time we've seen a lot of changes—seen a lot of new faces come to town. In fact, we brought a lot of them in ourselves.

We feel proud that we've played an important part in the development here. We've paid our taxes every year... over $7,000,000 last year, much of this to help maintain schools, highways and governmental activities. We furnished employment to 27,000 people, whose wages totaled up to $45,000,000. And every year we've been providing "Old Reliable" friendly freight and passenger service.

It would be nice to stay and chat awhile over old times, neighbor. We'd have a lot to talk about. But there isn't time. You're busy and so are we... on our second eighty-eight years.

TORIDE THE RIVER WITH WILLIAM MAC LEOD RAINE

CHAPTER I—Ruth Chiswick of L. C. ranch, obsessed by fear of danger to her outposts and beleaguered father, Lee, from a band of lawless rustlers headed by Sperm Howard, decides to save him by fleeing with young Lou Howard, Sperm's son, and comes to the town of L. C. to meet him. The rustlers, led by Sperm, a crook-nosed stranger, enter, slay one of the rustlers, and when a drunken cowboy, Jim Pender, tries to shoot Sperm, Lou Howard, Sperm's son, and Sperm's daughter, Ruth, flee. Sperm, the crook-nosed stranger, and Sperm's daughter, Ruth, flee. Sperm, the crook-nosed stranger, and Sperm's daughter, Ruth, flee.

Later she knew she would fog herself with her own scorn. She was a lying little cheat for not telling her father the truth. But she dared not confess without preparing his mind first. It would be like Ruth Chiswick to walk across to the Golden Nugget to have it out with Sperm Howard.

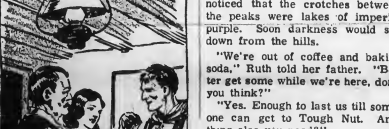

"We'll go over to Charley Wong's restaurant for supper," Lee Chiswick said. "Dan is waiting for us over there."

"Back of the restaurant they found a bucket of water, a tin pan, a tin piece of dirty soap, and a roller-towel much the worse for use."

The cattlemen called Wong. "This towel has half of Arizona on it, Charley. Bring a new one—and another piece of soap."

The Chinaman grinned. "Velly good," he said.

Inside the restaurant Dan Brand was waiting at a table in a corner. Across the aisle from him sat Jeff Ruth touched the cattlemen on the arm by way of calling his attention.

Chiswick offered his hand.

"This is Mr. Gray, Father. When that drunk man came shooting into Sanger's store he looked after me."

"Looked after you—how?" asked Chiswick.

"Pushed me back of some sacks of potatoes and stood in front of me."

Chiswick offered his hand. "Glad to meet you, Mr. Gray, reckon my daughter has thanked you, but I'll do it again."

"Nothing worth mentioning what I did, but she thanked me proper," the crook-nosed man said dryly.

"Since you haven't eaten yet, won't you join us?" the cattlemen invited.

Gray moved to the other table.

"My foreman, Dan Brand," Chiswick introduced. "Din, this is Mr. Gray."

The two men shook hands, estimating one another with their eyes. Chiswick motioned Gray to the vacant chair beside his daughter.

They fell at first into casual talk of cows, grass, markets.

"Looks like a country of small ranches," Gray said presently.

"Yes," Chiswick confirmed. "Plenty rough in these hills. Cut up by gulches and canyons where nesters have settled."

"Your ranch is lower down?"

"Yes. Runs up from the Sweet Spring valley into the hills."

"From what I heard at the Golden Nugget I gather the L. C. is a big outfit."

"My brand is on a lot of stock—or was," the cattlemen said grimly.

"Still is," Brand amended.

"I reckon," Anger flamed in Chiswick's tanned face. "Won't be long unless we can stop this big steal that is going on. A few of those rustlers will have to be strung up as a warning."

"Better not talk," advised Brand in a low voice.

"Why shouldn't I talk?" Chiswick demanded. "This is a free country,

The foreman fastened the chestnut with a slip-knot. "Got to get me some cattle tobacco," he said, and bowed across the road to the store.

As Brand passed the two young people, he gave Ruth a curious glance. Down at the corral where she had left her horse, he had learned a bit of news.

"All set to go?" Ruth asked him. "Soon as I get my chewing."

Curly was speaking to the girl in a low voice. She shook her head, decisively.

"No, Mr. Connor. I'm sure I am flattered. But you know Father doesn't like some of your friends. I don't think he would make you welcome at the L. C. if you rode out there."

"Not even if I dropped in kinds by chance?"

Ruth laughed. "Young men who drop in by chance don't fool him any more."

They followed Brand out of the store. Night was sweeping down over the valley. The first evening stars were pricking out. Above the door of a saloon farther down the street a lantern had been lit.

Lee Chiswick, in and out of gambling houses, Morgan Norris was no drifted in sight. He had disappeared into the Golden Nugget. Mile High and his friend Sid moved with trailing spurs to their companions.

Someone invited them to come back and have another drink.

"No, sir, we're hitting the trail," Mile High called back.

From the alley beside the Golden Nugget a flash split the darkness. The blast of a gun sounded—twice.

Lee Chiswick caught at the pommel of his saddle, at the same time dragging a revolver into sight. Ruth ran forward and slipped an arm around his waist.

"Get back, girl!" he shouted with an oath.

A man came swiftly, weapon in hand. From the end of the barrel a faint light drifted. The man was Jeff Gray.

Ruth clung to her father, her body rigid with the fear and the runner.

"You murderer!" she cried wildly. "You murderer!"

Gray stopped abruptly, and thrust his gun back into the holster.

"You don't think," he began, "I'm going to hurt you?"

Chiswick cried, struggling to free his arms.

Two more guns roared. Dan Brand and Curly Connor had come into action against the crook-nosed man.

Gray dodged behind the horses, crossed the street at a zigzag run, and when they had reached the ranch ran up the trailing reins of his snatched gun. Without touching the stirrups, he vaulted into the saddle.

The riding whirled at a touch, rising to his hind legs. A moment later the rider went racing down the street, lying low on the saddle.

But he whined past him. He did not stop. Horse and man vanished into the night.

Small Farmers To Get Increases

Larger Agricultural Conservation program payments will go to operator of small farms who cooperate in the 1938 program as a result of changes which the recently enacted Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 made in the method by which payments are to be made in connection with the program this year, according to O. M. Farrington, state executive officer of the AAA.

To provide for a scaling upward of the payments on small farms the farm Act provides for a system of increasing the payments to farmers who would earn less than $200 under the regular rates. The following scale will be used: When payment (at regular rates) is more than $200, the total payment will be increased 40 percent; payments of $200 to $400 will be increased 30 percent of amount over $200; payments of $400 to $600 will be increased 25 percent of amount over $400; payments of $600 to $800 will be increased 20 percent; and payments of $800 to $1000 will be increased 15 percent.

This scaling upward of the smaller payments will be a first change against funds available for payments.

Homemakers' Advisory Council To Meet

Plans for the spring program of Homemakers was discussed at the Advisory Council meeting on March 8th. The Advisory Council, consisting of county project leaders and local presidents, met Tuesday, March 8 at the home of Mrs. Sam Sleet, the county president of Homemakers.

Due to the many things to be discussed the council had an all day meeting. Miss Lillian Logan, AAA State Leader of Home Demonstration Agents, attended the conference.

150 Farmers Attend Soils and Crops Meeting

One hundred and fifty farmers attended the soils and crops meeting held at Burlington, last Friday, according to the county agent, and Mark Cook, chairman of the soils and crops project of Burlington community program of work.

Prof. E. J. Kinney, head of the crops work at the Kentucky Experiment Station were principal speakers on the program.

Farmers attending the meeting stated it was one of the most profitable and interesting farm educational meetings held in the county. The subjects discussed were of vital importance to improvement in soils and crops problem.

Subjects of interest to farmers at the meeting included some of the following:

Prof. E. J. Kinney—

1. There's no great difference in the quality of Burley tobacco secured from any improved varieties of Burley tobacco grown today. Experiment Station No. 16 is the most root rot resistant variety being grown and is equal to any in quality.

2. Old soil fields, previous to the cropping season, seem to prepare soil best for the production of high quality tobacco.

3. Prof. Kinney is of the opinion that natural curing should be used to the fullest extent and coke used only when poor curing weather develops. This means previous preparation should be made for use of coke or other curing agent.

4. Hybrid corn seed should be secured only from known sources and use of increased yields secured.

Not all domestic and very little foreign Red clover seed is adapted to Kentucky. Adapted Kentucky grown seed should be used. Farmers should make a tour to the Experiment Station Red clover fields this summer to study results being secured with adapted seed.

Prof. George Roberts—

1. Clovers should always be sown with all grasses because of the long-lived life of the grasses and the increased yields secured.

2. Don't use just a head of tobacco. Tobacco land should be in sod for at least three years previous to plowing. 400 lbs. of 3-8-6 fertilizer per acre drilled in two ribbons eight inches apart about ten days before setting would be a good general recommendation for fertilizing tobacco. This recommendation would not apply to every individual case. Sod and manure make for the best moisture conditions.

3. Early sown winter cover crops should always be sown on cultivated fields. Expensive losses of nitrogen results when cover crops are not used.

Perfect Attendance at Training Class

Twenty-two leaders, representing eleven Homemakers Clubs, attended the first training class in Foods last week in Burlington. The lesson was given by Mrs. Pearl Haak, Foods Specialist, University of Kentucky.

She was assisted by Mary Hood Gillespie, Home Demonstration Agent.

The eleven Homemakers Clubs of Boone County, representing 250 Homemakers, will study foods for their major project for the next four months. Mrs. Haak will conduct the four training classes. Actual preparation of food will take place at each local meeting. Mrs. Haak discussed the nutritive value of fruits and vegetables in the diet. She emphasized the importance of eating fruits and vegetables with an abundance of Vitamin A to prevent diseases of the nose and throat.

Training classes are conducted in the relief building in Burlington. The Community Public Service Co. is lending an electric stove for the training class.

Homemakers' Advisory Council To Meet

Plans for the spring program of Homemakers was discussed at the Advisory Council meeting on March 8th. The Advisory Council, consisting of county project leaders and local presidents, met Tuesday, March 8 at the home of Mrs. Sam Sleet, the county president of Homemakers.

Due to the many things to be discussed the council had an all day meeting. Miss Lillian Logan, AAA State Leader of Home Demonstration Agents, attended the conference.

492 Members Enrolled

In 4-H Clubs

Ten Boone County 4-H Clubs have been organized to date enrolling 492 members; just eight members short of the 500 member goal. The 500 member goal is expected to be exceeded by the next series of meetings.

Community clubs organized to date include Burlington, Florence, Walton, Verona, New Haven, Hamilton, Bellevue, Petersburg, Hebron and Taylorsport. Each club has a complete set of officers, including president, vice president, secretary-treasurer, club reporter, sergeant at arms, cheer leaders and project captains. Local adult leaders are assisting each community club and each project group of five or more members in the community club.

The 4-H clubs are making the most substantial advance under the 4-H motto "Make the Best Better."

Farm projects most popular among members are:

Corn—Growing one-half acre of hybrid variety in comparison with one-half acre of open pollinated varieties.

Tobacco—From one-fourth to one acre.

Garden—Various sizes, starting from a minimum of 20x40 feet.

Poultry—Four settings of eggs or 50 baby chicks if starting with baby chicks.

Dairy Calf—Starting a purebred dairy heifer.

Pigs—2 or more market pigs.

Lamb—Starting five or more ewes.

Coke—A new project that will be carried with from five to ten members this year.

Home projects popular among the members include sewing, canning, foods and room improvement.

Examples showing that club members make money was shown the past year when seventy-five Boone County members sold 33,500 pounds of tobacco in the Covington sale for $8,725.38.

Sewing and certain other projects have a strict educational value but are of equal interest to members.

4-H Club work is open to every boy and girl in the county between the age of 10 and 18 years, inclusive who carries out an approved agricultural or home economics project.

Enrollment cards may be secured from the community club secretaries or at the county agent's office in Burlington.

4-H Members Plan Radio Program

Boone County 4-H Club members are making plans for the presentation of a radio program over WHAS on March 29th at 11:45 a. m. The program will be devoted to the interests of Boone County 4-H Club members.

Everyone is urged to tune in on this program.

Electrical Discharges, Sour Milk

According to one authority, the electrical discharge during a thunderstorm probably affects the composition of the atmosphere and may have a souring effect on milk. Experiments made by scientists, however, fail to confirm this; they explain that thunderstorms frequently occur toward the end of hot summer days, and souring is likely to follow on such days, whether there is thunder or not.

THE GARDEN

POTATOES

By JOHN S. GARDNER,
Kentucky College of Agriculture.

Potato planting time is coming apace. As for that, some more venturesome gardeners have already planted their crops, though whether they will profit from their haste is problematical. In the latitude of Lexington, the right time lies between March 15 and April 10. In the extreme south portion of the state the time is a week or 10 days earlier and in the northern counties, a week later.

Potato land should be of the best. It should be deep and mellow, well enough drained not to stand in water but not subject to becoming excessively dry, either. To help it meet either condition it should contain humus or rotted down vegetable matter in large amounts.

The best humus material is stable manure, but unless it is well rotted particularly if horse manure, it may cause potato scab trouble. Other material are grass or clover sod, straw tree leaves, weeds or a "green manure" crop sown especially to turn under. Except for the last named, it is best to break the land in the previous fall to give the plowed matter time to rot, at least, partly. The green manure, rye or wheat, or best of all, barley, grown through the winter, should be turned under in the spring, six weeks before potato planting, if possible.

Potato land should be broken deep for the deeper the plowing the great moisture reservoir. Ten inches is perhaps a maximum breaking with horses, and, if the custom has been to break a lesser depth, each year an inch should be gained until that depth is reached. Before turning the land, it is well to cut fine with a disk any growth or any of the materials just named just named, so that rotting may proceed speedily, for, unrotted, they may make the land "drouthy" especially in season of scant rainfall.

A most important item in successful potato growing is using good seed. Roughly, there are two kinds:

certified and common, so-called "select." The former is standard always but the latter may be extremely variable. Sometimes, "select" seed potatoes are merely table potatoes though somewhat more uniform in shape and size, perhaps. Sometimes "select" seed is a mixture of several varieties that conform generally to one shape. If seed of that sort is used with some of the varieties unsuited to Kentucky's climate and to the season, the results may be extremely disappointing.

The way to be safe is to use only certified seed, guaranteed all to be of the variety named on the tag to contain less than 5 percent of the "running out" diseases that cause low yields, and show less than 5 percent of either scab and black scurf. To make sure, however, that the seed is genuine certified seed the seed must be examined to see that the certifying agency is reputable: a State College of Agriculture, a State Department of Agriculture or a State Seed Commission. Also, the name and address of the grower is given, for producers of genuine certified seed producers are proud to stand behind their products.

It is dangerous to sell a SUBSTITUTE for 66¢ just to make three or four cents more. Customers are your best assets; lose them and you lose your business. 66¢ is worth three or four times as much as a SUBSTITUTE.

LANDING
BOONE COUNTY

We are indeed sorry to hear of the extremely serious condition of Forest Black, who is at present in St. Elizabeth Hospital.
The W. M. U. met at the church building Thursday with a fairly good attendance. Some of the Y. W. A. met also for the purpose of studying a book, taught by Mrs. George Harrison of the W. M. U.
Miss Barbara Huff spent the week end with her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Huff.
Alright folks, that play we have been inserting notices of from week to week in at last "Here!" This Friday night, March 11th, is the date—Hamilton school is the place—and don't fail to see it; also we might add, to hear it. And by no means ordinary is the "Kitchen Orchestra" that occupies the stage between acts. Washboards, hand skillets, knives, spoons and potato mashers—yes, and egg beaters, add up enough rhythm for the most pessimistic to turn faces.

Habits of the Bee Family
Although drones are the fathers of queens and worker bees, they themselves, have no male parents, strange as it may seem. Drones hatch from unfertilized eggs laid by the queen. In the queen's body, sperms which fertilize eggs from which females hatch are contained in a sack. When the queen desires to lay a drone egg, she simply does not release the sperms and hence the drone eggs are unfertilized. Strangely, too, worker bees—which are understood to be females—in the absence of a queen, lay drone eggs but have no way to fertilize eggs so as to bring forth queens or workers.

Wearing Pearls Old Custom
Wearing pearls for decoration dates back to the days of Greece and Egypt, when Phoenicians bartered their jewels from Arabia and Ceylon.

David Rea has sold a fine wearing coat to F. M. Landram of Napoleon, for $100.

Last Monday morning a very happy wedding took place at the Warsaw Catholic Church, when Michael Klaren of Chicago, and Miss Mollie Mylor of this county, were united in the bonds of holy wedlock by the pastor, Rev. Wm. Meisner of Verona.

Mrs. S. J. Crutcher, who has been visiting relatives at friends at Dallasburg, Owen County, and at Louisville, returned home here on Wednesday.

Capt. James Burke of Cincinnati was a visitor here Sunday. His wife and son James remained here this week, the guests of her sister, Mrs. George Winters.

Miss Kate Summons, who has been attending college at Midway, Woodford County, returned home here last week. Her many friends were glad to welcome her home again.

Sweet, Sweet Pain
Several centuries ago people seemed not only indifferent to pain, but almost to love it. In Spain, particularly, it was a common custom for lovers to scourge themselves during Holy Week to win the admiration of their sweethearts. If a flagellant met a pretty woman on the street and was able to strike himself so that some of the blood sprinkled on her, his honor was great and the lady was grateful.

Several centuries ago people seemed not only indifferent to pain, but almost to love it. In Spain, particularly, it was a common custom for lovers to scourge themselves during Holy Week to win the admiration of their sweethearts. If a flagellant met a pretty woman on the street and was able to strike himself so that some of the blood sprinkled on her, his honor was great and the lady was grateful.

Movies For Child
Require Selection

Should children go to the movies? Miss Mary Munford, in charge of the nursery school of the University of Kentucky College of Agriculture makes the following suggestions:

Be sure the theatre has proper air circulation, fire escapes, etc.

Do not take small children to movies suggestive of crime, or movies that are over-exciting.

If the child goes to movies occasionally, be sure that also has active, creative recreation. Movies depict nothing of the child, and too many of them may act as a narcotic.

Select movies carefully, perhaps using lists put out from month to month as suitable by dependable magazines.

Let the movies be an occasional supplement to healthful outdoor recreation for the child. For the older child, wisely chosen pictures may be definitely helpful, though for the pre-school child movies are injurious.

"A good movie may do as much as fine art or literature in shaping the child's attitude and interests," Miss Munford points out. "A movie suitable for a 10-year-old may be poor for one six years old. They should be chosen as carefully as toys or other equipment, with an eye to promoting growth and development. Parents must decide as to the advantages and disadvantages of each picture at each age level."

XVI. Kentucky, Pioneer Children

The heroism of Kentucky Pioneers still thrills a ready public but the story would be incomplete if it did not record a few examples of the part played in the settlement of Kentucky by their young children.

Little William Placuit, who came with his parents in 1791, was on the ill-fated boat of captain Hubble which miraculously escaped killing either the five horses on board and four killing or wounding seven of the nine men who defended it. After the boat was safely landed, this brave little lad asked that his injuries be attended to. A ball that had passed through the side of the boat had struck him on the forehead and remained under the skin. Another had splintered the bone at the point of his elbow. When his distressed mother exclaimed, "Why did you not tell me of this," he replied coolly "Because Captain Hubble directed us to be silent."

When the Craigs and their companions journeyed over the Wilderness Road, they came near losing their baby. One morning while mother and father were busy packing the animals for the day's journey, the little sister begged that baby should ride with her in the basket. But father did not hear the conversation and taking it for granted that his baby son was safe in his mother's arms, he started the caravan on its way and had gone quite a distance before the mother discovered the absence of the little tow-head in the basket and cried "Where is the baby?"

Consternation reigned supreme. Father, leaving his family to the care of a guard, galloped back to their camp ground in search of his child. There he found the lost baby, sound asleep under the tree and brought him safely to Kentucky where he lived to become the founder of a notable family.

At Strode's Fort, which stood near the present town of Winchester, a brave little boy went into the woods one evening to drive the cow to the fort so they could be milked. Cloutously, he scattered twigs of the paw-paw bushes as he went, so he would be able to re-trace his steps through the pathless woodland.

Suddenly he heard a foot step and discovered a band of Indians following him. Did he run, or cry for help? No, indeed. Pretending he had not discovered their presence and knowing full well that the cow would be in the fort, if the Indians besieged it, he whistled a tune and proceeded to drive the cows into the stockade before giving the alarm.

When the whole family was ill and in need of bread, little Patsy Laird had to ride through the woods to take a sack of corn to the mill to be ground. She was strapped to the horse and told if she saw an Indian, to lie flat, with her arms around his neck, give him his flank. The miller waited upon her promptly adjusted the sack of meal behind her so it would not slip off and the brave little girl started home

When nearly there she heard a sound and suddenly an Indian's hand reached for her bridle rein. Remembering instructions she dug her spur into her horse's flank. Swiftly he galloped over the familiar path and reached his stable door white with foam, his game little rider and her meal still on his back.

When the Indians came to attacked Montgomery's Fort, they concealed themselves in the woods and gobbled like wild-turkeys. The fighting men had gone to Pettit's Fort and left only a few old men to guard the women and children.

Wary of confinement within the old walls, the children begged the old men to go about the keys. Wise ones, however, restrained the eager little ones and told them they were hearing Indians, not turkeys and should remain quietly within the stockade. The Indians came into the open and attacked the poorly defended fortification and it became apparent that it would be captured unless help could be had.

In this emergency brave little Belay Montgomery, raced through the Indian infested woods to Pettit's Fort for help. Running like a gazelle springing over fallen trees and rocks, the little girl spread the news in time for a squad of armed horsemen to overtake the Indians and rescue the fortifiers they were carrying off to captivity.

Fort Jefferson, built by George Rogers Clark on the Mississippi River in 1780, was besieged by twelve hundred Indians and the brave fortifiers were reduced to the verge of starvation before Clark got to their rescue. During the five-day siege, when babies were starving for milk, the Indians kept the fort cow beyond reach of the garrison. One morning Nancy Ann Hunter, a half-grown girl who assisted with the milking, discovered a baby calf that had gone to sleep against the fort walls. Quick as a flash, without confiding her plan to anyone, she dashed out the fort gate, gathered the calf in her arms, and ran back to safety, the following mother cow following her bleating calf into the fort.

Mr. Hogg lived on top of a hill and his nearest neighbor in a log cabin at the foot of it. One day when his neighbor was away from home, he noticed three Indians creeping toward the house. Knowing the family should be warned, he quickly stripped his little son, greased his body so he would be hard to catch, put him on a good horse and told him to go at full speed down the steep hill shouting, "Open the door, open the door!"

The child obeyed and got inside in a trice, and the brave mother got her gun and shot the foremost Indian. It takes two good Indians to carry off a wounded one, so they took their wounded companion to the creek and stanching his bleeding wound with his moccasins, then carried him away. That bloody moccasin is a grim keepsake in the family today, reminding them of Tommy Hogg's courageous ride.

Thursday Night—
The second teams of Florence and Walton-Verona played the first game of the meet and the Waltonians had little trouble in hanging up a 49 to 11 win. New Haven and Hebron met next and after a hard fight the Cardinals emerged winners, 30 to 23. In the night-cap, the Walton Bears defeated Burlington's 54 to 27 victory over Hamilton.

Friday Night—
In the opener, Hamilton Reserves defeated Burlington's Second stringers 43 to 17. Next, the Hebron lads had a tough time in gaining a 26 to 19 win over Florence. The Knights led until the final quarter, having a 15 to 12 edge at the half, and being in a deadlock at 17-17 as the final set-to started. Brooks was high scorer for Florence, with 14 points and Hitzfield tallied 10 for Hebron. In the final session of the evening Walton-Verona trounced Burlington 65 to 20, with Osborn ringing-up 31 points.

Saturday Afternoon—
This session brought together four second teams. Walton downed New Haven 53 to 18, with McElroy leading the way with 21 points. In the other contest, Hamilton scored a 22 to 17 win over Hebron, with Williamson leading the winners with 8 markers.

The tournament, as a whole, was very successful in all respects. Mr. Colton, tournament manager, capably handled all details; Referee Colwell and Austing did a good job of officiating, and Scorer Huff of Hamilton, and Timer McNeely of Burlington, did their duties well, and no squawks were heard from any source.

Following the final game, trophies were awarded to the winners: Hebron and Walton first teams; Walton and Hamilton second teams by County Superintendent, D. H. Morris.

Tournament officials picked an all-tournament team and the following players were named:
Forwards—Osborn, Walton; Hitzfield, Hebron, Brooks, Florence, and Griffith, New Haven. Centers—Myers, Florence, and Turner, Hebron. Guards—Barlow, New Haven; Carroll, Hamilton; Shinkle, Hebron, and Chapman, Walton.

Bearcats Lose To Bellevue

In 9th Regional Finals
At Covington, Saturday
Night, 45 to 22

The Walton-Verona Bearcats took a sound thrashing Saturday night in the finals of the Regional basketball tournament, at the Holmes gym, Covington, when these Bellevue Tigers took them into camp, 45 to 22, and won the right to participate in the State meet at Lexington this week.

"Our boys" put up a game battle against the Tigers, but were somewhat out of form, while their opponents were "hot", and so had to be satisfied with second place honors which is not bad at all, and the boys should be proud of their achievement.

The Tiger squad had scored Walton's flashy forward, pretty well bottled up and he held to nine points, after having scored 19 points in each of the preceding games. Bellevue's star, Dumford, ran wild and tallied 31 points, but this only gained him a tie with Osborn for scoring honors in the tournament with 47 markers each.

Walton-Verona gained the right to participate in the finals by winning a thrilling 25 to 23 victory over the New Port Wildcats, and turning back the Morgan Raiders 42 to 28. Bellevue had previously defeated Covington, 30 to 25, and Hebron, 31 to 15.

The Hebron Cardinals, the other Boone County entry, defeated Butler 34 to 15 in their first game of the tournament and Morgan eked out a 31 to 27 win over the Dixie Heights Colonels in the other first round games.

After the trophies had been awarded the winners and runner up referees, Tehan and Lamb picked an all-tournament team consisting of the following players: Dumford, Bellevue; Osborn, Walton; Hummer, Bellevue; Wilson, Butler; Lattimer, Morgan; Chapman, Walton; Kinsale and Huffield, Hebron; Hudson, Covington, and another, whose name we were unable to learn.

The Bearcats can now hang up a 31 to 27 win over the Dixie Heights Colonels (you know it's spring), etc. The boys and their coach, Glenn Laws deserve much credit for the record they made this year.

Aldersgate Revival Now In Progress

At Walton M. E. Church—Services at 7:00 P. M. Nightly

R. R. ROSE, Pastor
Many will wonder why the projected meeting now in progress at the Walton Methodist Church, is called the "Aldersgate Revival". The simple fact is that the Rev. John Wesley, human organizer of the Methodist Church, had his "heart strangely warmed" at a service held in a chapel on Aldersgate (Street London, England on May 24, 1738. He was then 35 years of age and had long sought salvation by his own good works; by prayer, fasting, methodical and sacrificial living and by even becoming a missionary to the American Indians in the state of Georgia, but all to no avail in spite of the fact that he had been brought up in a very Godly home the home of a minister in the Church of England, and was a graduate of Oxford University where he himself had trained for the ministry, with the idea, too, of saving his own soul. The Methodist church, throughout the world, with twelve million members and many more converts, are this year commemorating the two hundredth anniversary of his "heart-warming" experience expressed in the following words:

"In the evening I went very unwillingly to a society in Aldersgate Street, where one was reading Luther's preface to the Epistle to the Romans. About a quarter before nine, while he was describing the change which God works in the heart through faith in Christ, I felt my heart strangely warmed. I felt that I did trust in Christ, Christ alone, for salvation; and an assurance was given me that He had taken away my sins, even mine, and saved me from the law and death." His brother, Charles Wesley, author of "Jesus Love of My Soul," and one of the greatest hymn writers of the Christian era, had a similar experience the day before, May 25, 1738, on Little Britain Street, near Aldersgate, and expressed it thus: "I walked under the presence of Christ and gave myself up soul and body to Him." He, too, had long been a seeker for a satisfying experience in his heart. One William Holland, a pious house-painter, guided him, he read John Martin Luther's comment on the second chapter of the Epistle to the Galatians, where the words, "He loved me and gave himself for me," went straight to his heart. A little later on he awoke in (Continued On Last Page)

AFTER THOUGHTS

By GEORGE
The croaking of the frogs this time of the year is a forerunner of spring. The little fellows are lifting up their voices in unison now so it means that spring is just around the corner.

Thursday is the day to plant potatoes as this St. Patrick's Day. Don't forget the St. Patrick's Day dance to be given at Simon-Kentons school tonight. We hope to attend if possible.

The Bearcats and Newport had a natural thriller at Covington last Thursday night. The local lads held the lead until the closing minutes of the last period when the Postersmen forged ahead. With less than two minutes to play the Wildcats were leading by four points and then the Bearcats made six points to win the ball game. I was an eye witness and it sure was a thrilling climax.

Those present at the banquet held at the Waltonon Hotel I felt were very high in their praise of the service rendered for their convenience and everyone reported a good time. This was the first one of these meetings that has been held that I can recall.

The Spring Equinox will officially arrive March 21st. How many of you folks have gotten your new spring outfits? I am not going to flourish mine this season, people will know how much money you have saved (or haven't saved) during the winter months.

It will not be long now until the snakes will be crawling out onto the surface. Tuesday woke all of them up and even the lightning furnished them the necessary vision to see it crawl out of their hiding places.

Wonder what happened to the two candidates for U. S. Senator, May be this weather will bring forth some results. Both factions have been fairly quiet.

Basketball Game Here, March 25

P. T. A. Members and School Faculty to Clash In Hardwood Battle

On Friday, March 25th, the members of the Walton Parent-Teacher's Association are to stage a basketball game at the local gym. The teams will be composed of members of the P. T. A., and the faculty of Walton school. Two games are to be played with both the men and women showing their skill in the net game.

The P. T. A., "Mammies" are to pull hair with the lady faculty members, and the "puppies" will clash with the men of the faculty. Games of this type have been very popular and entertaining this season, and we are sure this will be no exception.

The players on the "Mammies" squad include Mrs. Wallace Grubb, Mrs. Dewey Benson, Mrs. Dwight Maddox, Mrs. Clifford Pruett, Mrs. W. W. House, Mrs. Nell Campbell, Mrs. Bennett, Jackson, Mrs. Grover Young, Mrs. Roland Glenn and Mrs. R. A. Thornton.

The faculty lasses have on their pull hair with the lady faculty members, and the "puppies" will clash with the men of the faculty. Games of this type have been very popular and entertaining this season, and we are sure this will be no exception.

The cheer leaders for this auspicious occasion are to be Miss Jean Chambers and Mrs. R. F. Ale Modis. You are most cordially invited to attend these games and see basketball as it was played in the "Model" days. Don't forget the time—Friday, March 25.

TO RIDE THE RIVER WITH WILLIAM MACLEOD RAINE

WILLIAM MACLEOD RAINE

CHAPTER I—Ruth Chiswick of L. C. ranch, obsessed by fear of danger to her outposts and beleaguered father, Lee, from a band of lawless rustlers headed by Sherm Howard, decides to save him by eloping with young Lou Howard, Sherm's son, and comes to the town of Tall Hot to meet him. While in Tall Hot's store, a crooked stranger enters, sizes up the situation, and when a cow-boy, who is a stranger, enters in and starts shooting, protests Ruth, while Lee, who is a stranger, protests Lou's cowardice. Ruth calls off the eloping man, who is a stranger, and she and her father at the gambling house across the street. The stranger, who is a stranger, is self Jeff Gray, meets Morgan Norris, a stranger, and a stranger, who is a stranger, is High Hunt and other rustlers, and Sherm Howard. Lee Chiswick, father of the rustler, Dan Brand, and tells Sherm Howard of his orders to shoot rustlers at sight.

CHAPTER II—Jeff Gray returns to Ruth and coldly reassures her of her father's safety. At supper, Ruth introduces Jeff to her father and Brand, and in Sherm's store later, she reveals cordially to Curly Connor. Coming out of the store, they are greeted by sudden gunplay. Lee is wounded, and Jeff Gray appears with a smoking revolver.

CHAPTER III

In an incredibly short time after the firing had ceased a crowd of milling men surrounded the Chiswicks.

All the color had washed out of Ruth's face. Her arm still supported the wounded cattleman. She begged:

"No one in town. My high an answer. 'I'll ride to Tough Nut for one if you like, Miss.'"

Lee drew a hand across the back of his neck and looked at the stain. "Cressed me," he said. "Must have knocked me dizzy with the shock. More than my Ninny peg."

From the outskirts of the press Morgan Norris asked a question. "Who did it?"

"That sorreltop stranger," answered Curly. "Open out my way, boys, and let Mr. Chiswick through. Better get him into the Golden Nugget."

"I'll go into Sanger's," Chiswick said. "No use making a fuss. I'm not hurt."

The broad shoulders of Dan Brand opened a path.

"Are you sure it's not as soon as, Father?" Ruth asked, as soon as they had reached the store.

"Sure," Lee replied curtly. "Just a scratch. Get me water, a clean towel, and some linen to tie up my neck. Vell," he ordered.

Sherman Howard came into the store as Ruth was tying a handkerchief around her father's neck to hold the bandage in place.

He said suavely: "I wouldn't have had this happen, or a thousand dollars, Lee. I've got men out on the trail after this skunk, and if they catch him we'll sure string him to a cottonwood."

"Why, the scallawag ate supper with us not 15 minutes ago," Brand burst out indignantly. "Soon as I see him I know he was a damn horse, but I didn't figure on him pulling any such a thing as that."

"Hadn't been for Miss Chiswick the fellow would have finished the job," Curly cried with enthusiasm. "I never saw anything like the way she stood between him and her father. He couldn't get in another shot."

"You and Dan drove him off, Mr. Connor," Ruth said blushing.

"I certainly owe you thanks for your help," Chiswick said to Curly. "His bullet had knocked me silly and I couldn't do anything myself."

"Yore gun came out mighty swift, sir. I noticed that. Maybe if you hadn't been dazed you might have done better than Dan and me. We both missed clean, I reckon."

"Didn't have time to get set," apologized Brand. "He was moving mighty fast."

"And still is," Curly added with a grin.

"We'll hit the trail," Chiswick told the foreman. "Might bring the horses across to the door."

"Do you think you're able to travel?" his daughter asked, with a worried frown.

"Why not wait till morning, Lee?" Howard said. "You'll need more comfortable at Ma Presnell's. Better play safe."

"You think some yellow coyote will take a crack at me?" the L. C. owner asked bluntly, his hard gaze on Howard.

"No. I think you may be hurt worse than you figure. If you're set on riding, Curly will ride with you till you are clear of town, I reckon."

"Sure I will," assented Curly. "Mighty glad to go with you, though you're perfectly safe from that killer, I would say."

"You can't ride beside me, young fellow," Chiswick told him. "But I'll take your proposition up and see you to go along with my daughter till we get out of this town. You and Dan will flank her. I'll ride in front alone. If there's another rustler wants to get me, here he is."

XVII—Kentucky Homes

After the pioneer settler had chosen the site of his future home in the Wilderness, and planted a crop of corn, he went back to the Settlement and brought his family and his slaves and his live stock. And so by the fall of 1775 there were women and children in the Kentucky forts. Nearby they built their cabin homes on their own lands, and a few years later they ventured thither when the Indians were not on the warpath.

These log cabins were of round logs, for there was no time to have them. They usually needed more than the foot of a hill in some sequestered spot, so as to elude the watchful eye of the prowling savage. With the bark left on the logs the cabin was scarcely visible when the forest trees were in full leaf; and the young settler labored early and late clearing his land, planting his corn, gun in hand.

During the cropping season it often happened that all the fortifier of a given fort would be about their household duties in their own log cabins when a "messenger" would slip up to the door, tap lightly on it and whisper the one word, "Indians!" then sped away in the darkness on his dangerous mission to warn other settlers of the impending danger. Quickly, not without even lighting a candle or stirring a fire, father and mother gathered valuables and necessities together giving each child its share of the burden to carry as they crept cautiously through the dark forest to the friendly fort. Inured to danger and trained to quick action, there is record of a terrified little one uttering a sound. Even the dog of the pioneer was trained to silence lest his bark betray his master's whereabouts to the enemy.

The building of these first cabin homes of Kentucky is an interesting phase of our history. The materials were scarce, the plans, no contractors. The house simply sprang into existence in the incredible space of three days. The materials grew up with the work. The work was done by friends and companions. It was constructed without a nail or a scrap of iron, and not one of them ever cost a farthing.

The pioneers never spoke of building, but of "rolling up a cabin." The choppers, felled the trees and, on them the proper length for side and ends of the house. An experienced man selected a straight grained tree three or four feet in diameter for the cornerboards for the roof. He split them four feet long and as wide as possible, while another group of workmen cut the suitable trees for the puncheon floors, splitting the logs in half for them. Thus all the materials were prepared the first day. On the second day the four corner-boards were selected and "the raising" began. There was always good natured rivalry among the corner-men, striving to make his "sides" a perfect fit. When the structure had become too high for the logs to be Again the death angel has visited our community and taken away one of our beloved women, Mrs. Mae Beach, wife of R. N. Beach. She was stricken with a shock on Saturday afternoon about 2:30 and only lived about an hour and a half. She had been in perfect health up to the time of her death. She had been busy preparing supper for her children and grandchildren, who were expected home that evening. Her death was a shock to her family and friends. Mrs. Beach was 64 years old, was a faithful member of the Mt. Zion Baptist Church, was a good Christian lady, and will be greatly missed by her family and friends. Besides her husband, R. N. Beach, she leaves several children, Mrs. Cecil Lyons, Miss Doris Beach and Claud Beach of Calif., Mrs. Corlene Franks, Mrs. Kathryn Ferrell Addison, Bert and Robert of this place, and Mrs. Blanche Malone of Louisville; five grandchildren; one sister, Mrs. Bertie Woods of Washington, and one brother, Guy Smith of Mexico, besides a host of other relatives and friends, to mourn her departure. The entire community extends their sympathy to the bereaved family.

Mrs. Nellie Dunlap of Bellevue Ky., spent several days here last week visiting her son Warren Dunlap and family. Mr. and Mrs. Ed Nix and Ray Lawrence and family.

Our new pastor, Rev. J. C. Glasgow of Louisville, filled his first appointment here Sunday, and was entertained in the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. T. Johnson.

Pierce Bingham is staying at the home of his uncle, R. S. Bingham and family, and will be in Covington. His parents, E. J. Bingham and family have moved near Florence.

Mr. and Mrs. Jess Rex and son Clifford of Latonia, spent the week end with Mr. and Mrs. Herman Carmack and family.

Tribute to Wesley John Wesley, founder of Methodism, like so many others, was bitter and coarsely assailed in his lifetime. But there were compensations. Once, a differing bishop, at table, refused to sit above him, saying, "Mr. Wesley, ma. I be found sitting at your feet in another world!"

Herbs Witch Doctor's Ally Herbs seem to be the witch doctor's most potent ally. One preparation, made from the leaves and roots of a species of willow, is used successfully on diseases varying from purperal fever to distemper in dogs. And it is said to have just as much effect on whites as it has on African natives.

Boone County Farm Notes

Free Tobacco Seed For 4-H Club Members

Boone County 4-H Club members expecting to use certified Experiment Station No. 16 tobacco seed may secure enough seed for their project free of charge thru the county agent's office in Burlington. These seed will also be available to members at the community club meetings being held this week and next week.

These seed have been donated thru the generosity of one of the leading certified seed tobacco producers and are not for sale. The county agent's office does not sell seed or any other commodities. The office, however, does attempt to keep a list of leading producers and will be glad at any time to advise growers where they can locate certified tobacco seed of any of the popular varieties, provided the seed can not be secured locally.

Active Schedule Planned by 4-H
Boone County 4-H clubs have been active in planning for the coming year to be conducted during the next two months. Three community club meetings per club will be held, properly organized and project work started.

A number of new members are expected at the second series of meetings, 1938 ACP Notes—

The following are a few brief notes on the 1938 Agricultural Conservation Program that will be of interest to farmers:
The 1938 program is similar to the 1937 program in most respects. The general differences between the two programs include:—

1. Bases will be established for general soil depleting crops (tobacco and in instances, wheat excluded) but no reduction will be required and no payment for reduction will be made on general soil depleting crops.
2. Tobacco bases will be established and payment made for diversion in acreage from 10 to 20 percent of bases. Farms with 2.2 acres or more will reduce 20 percent and farms with 2.2 acres bases or less will reduce 10 percent. If allotments are exceeded deductions in payment will be made at the same rate credit is given.
3. Wheat bases will be established only where farmers normally normally make 100 bushels or more.
4. Soil building practices will be paid for at similar rates to last year. TVA phosphate is also expected to be available to farmers in the ACP allowances.
5. Small farms will have their payments increased by special amounts depending on the size of payment.
6. Limited credit will be made available to farmers who wish to borrow money to carry out soil building practices.

All details of the 1938 program have not been worked out at present. Community meetings are being held over the county last week and this Farmers especially interested in hearing the various angles of the program discussed are urged to attend one of the meetings.

New Farm Program Helps Agriculture Protects Consumer

The Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 is designed to provide an all-around national farm program which will help farmers and at the same time protect consumers of the nation, according to information received by the Kentucky College of Agriculture. The principal points of the program follow:

SOIL CONSERVATION—The new farm program which is outlined in the legislation continues and supplements the agricultural conservation programs which have been in effect for the past two years under the soil conservation and domestic allotment act of 1936.

FIVE CROPS—Upon the foundation of the conservation programs, five specific provisions are made for five crops—cotton, wheat, corn, tobacco and rice. For these crops the Act provides that the program is to be administered so as to provide for producing adequate supplies each year for domestic consumption and exports and also to maintain ample reserves.

EVER-NORMAL GRANARY—The provisions of the Act designed to maintain supplies at specified levels are expected to bring about substantial increases in particularly in the case of corn and wheat.

LOAN—The Act directs that loans to be made to corn, cotton and wheat producers under certain conditions, and authorizes loans to be made on other agricultural commodities at the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture and the President. The loans are to be made by the Commodity Credit Corporation, which has made loans to farmers on cotton and corn in past years.

ACREAGE ALLOTMENTS AND QUOTAS—Acreage and commodity allotments will be made for each of the five crops. If a crop is so large that supplies reach high levels the Act provides that a marketing quota will be effective if two thirds of the farmers voting in a referendum of producers of the commodity approve the quota.

CROP INSURANCE—The new Act provides for crop insurance for wheat. The first crop that will be insured will be the 1938 wheat crop.

the morning with the experience expressed above.

Another leader of the early Methodist movement, was George Whitefield, the great evangelist of the movement though differing with the Wesleyans in certain opinions. So great a preacher was he that it is claimed that ten thousand persons professed conversion under a single sermon delivered in Cambuslang near Glasgow, Scotland. He expressed his own conversion in these words: "After having read a book 'Life of God in the Soul of Man' by Scougal and given by Charles Wesley:

"While reading in it that true religion was the union of the soul with God, or Christ formed within us, a ray of light divine instantly darted in upon my soul, and from that moment, I must not till then I know that I must be a new creature. . . . Though I had fasted watched, and prayed, and received the Sacrament so long; excellent treatise by the hands of my never-to-be-forgotten friend."

This conscious relation with God is a Bible doctrine and is confirmed to us by such experience as those above, though received in different manners in certain details; yet it is the same Lord and the same Spirit. It is such a relation as this that is the aim of these series of meetings—a right and conscious relation with God and one's fellow-man—both for church members and non-church members. We are persuaded that many who are even members of the church, should prayerfully and honestly weigh these things.

To have "the blessed assurance" in one's heart and life is not to be a fanatic, or to lay undue stress upon emotional experience, but it is only a sane, normal, satisfying experience that will stand the test in trial or even death. Nor does it mean that when one has obtained such an experience that he is to do so for the sake of the experience itself. It is that we may better glorify God and be of greater service to others in promoting the "Kingdom of God," which, "is not eating and drinking, but righteousness, and joy and peace by the agency of the Holy Spirit." Such wonderful joy, satisfying peace, and the righteousness which is of faith in Christ, we may have if we will.

Behold! Jesus stands at the door and knocks.

Walton Firemen Lose 2 Games

At Local Gym, Friday Night to Walton CCC
Team and New Haven

The Volunteer Firemen hooked up with the local CCC camp in the first game of two that the team minded firemen had on the bill for Friday night. The game started off with the red-shirted men taking a big lead in the first quarter, and were never headed. The men of the CCC hit from all angles and the firemen were never a very serious threat until the final minutes of the game when the score was fairly even with the firemen out scoring Uncle Sam's tree army. Mitchell was the high pointed gatherer of the contest, pacing both teams with 45 points, with 12 points was the big gun of the firemen. The final score being CCC (33) Firemen (30).

The second game was the Independent team of New Haven and this game proven also to be a target as far as the local quietest was concerned. The New Havenites jumped into the lead at the first of the game and Walton was in the lull until the closing minutes of the last quarter when they came from behind to tie the score at 32 all and force the game into a overtime period. In this period New Haven scored four points while the Firemen were hitting one foul shot New Haven scored four points, while the Firemen were hitting one foul shot New Haven winning 36 to 33. Surgeon and Ryan divided the scoring honors for the visitors with 11 markers a piece. Allen was again the big gun for Walton scoring 12 in this game. The game was very ably called by Glenn Laws.

It is a merry mixup for the audience when Leon falls in love with one girl, although he has her name mixed with that of her friend, and thinks that his uncle is determined to wed him to a "Western cowgirl." As to the confusion he has been married before and his dead wife's stepdaughter insists on calling him "Papa!"

James Theatre Opened Thursday

Beautiful New Movie House Attracting Large Crowds

Amid no fanfare or ballhoon, the beautiful new James Theatre, was opened to the public last Thursday night. At the opening, and nightly since, large crowds have been present to inspect this most modern movie house and to see the first class picture--being shown.

The patrons have been loud in their acclaim of the new theatre, as well as the films offered on the screen, and this praise is justly deserved. Mr. Falls has appeared on his efforts to give Walton one of the finest and most modern theatres in Northern Kentucky, and will venture to say in addition, that there is no finer in the state, located in a town of the size of Walton. We realize that there are some, who do not attend moving pictures to any great extent, but really, you owe it to yourself to see this "show place of Walton."

The interior, which has a seating capacity of nearly 500, is modernistic in design and is indeed pretty, not gaudy, but with plenty of color that blends beautifully. A more detailed account might be given, but we think you would appreciate it more by seeing it yourself, if you haven't already.

In addition to the theatre there is a cozy little restaurant in the building where three patrons may be refreshed and this too, is quite nice. Miss Maile Falls is in charge of this department.

The town of Walton should be really proud of this new structure because an improvement of this type is a boost for any community. This will draw more people to our town and everyone will be benefited.

We wish to congratulate Mr. Falls on his achievement and wish him unlimited success--and also, our hats are off to the contractors, Geo. P. Nicholson and Son, who did a swell job.

Odors Easily Detected

No sense is so sensitive as the sense of smell, according to Dr. Ivor Griffith, writing in the American Journal of Pharmacy, publication of the Philadelphia College of Pharmacy and Science. He says camphor can be detected in a dilution of one part in 400,000; musk one in 1,000,000; and vanilla one in 10,000,000. A good smell can detect one billionth of an ounce of attar of roses and one trillionth of an ounce of ethyl mercaptan (rotten egg odor).

Last Thursday evening Mrs. Jean Sanford entertained with a St. Patrick's Party, with about 30 guests present. A delightful evening was enjoyed by all who attended. Sandwiches, salads, pickles, soft drinks, pop corn, angel food and coconut cake, custard, with whipped cream decorated with shamrocks were served.

While the attendants were enjoying the elaborate occasion the hostess made the surprising announcement of the wedding of one of our community's most popular couples. The bride is the only daughter of Dr. and Mrs. R. N. Williams of this place and is a favorite in the hearts of all who know her. The groom is the brother of Mrs. Jean Sanford and has made his home here with her since October

Nature didn't plan for this Strain on your eyes!

By day your ancestor's eyes were rested by woodland greenery, at night by darkness. There was no reading of fine print, no close, eye-fatiguing work, no flickering movies and speeding autos to whirl thousands of images before delicate eyes constantly... no artificial light and glare. Today all these things are putting on your eyes a tax Nature never intended.

No wonder then that of every five people, the eyes of one are subjected to severe eyestrain. If there is one thing you should never guess about it is your eye condition. All the light and sight of your life come through your eyes. Your work and play... EVERYTHING depends upon them.

Today In Kentucky

(Henry Ward)

Frankfort, Ky., March—Governor A. B. Chandler has been convinced that it would be politic to permit the voters of Kentucky to get the idea that he is deserting his avowed intention of providing for payment of the entire state debt by the end of the present state administration. So the counties of Kentucky cannot expect much financial assistance from the state than they are now getting, even though they do have the sympathy of the administration. The chief executive has been impressed by his campaign strategists with the point that he cannot afford to have it said that he is willing to junk the debt-paying program in an effort to win votes in his race for the Democratic Senatorial nomination against Senator Alben W. Barkley. New Deal see in the in the Senate. The result was that he declined to give administration approval to Representative Rodes Myers' proposal for a $2,000,000 slush fund for the counties. Instead, he has elected a plan under which the counties would receive a lot of advice and some help, if they get in such bad shape that they have to default on their road and bridge bond payments.

Chief feature of this plan is a provision that the counties may use their own funds to make improvements from the $2,000,000 state fund that was created in 1936 to pay on their road and bridge bonds if they are faced with the threat of having to default on bond payments. Although recommended on the surface at least, as a plan to help the financially disabled counties, this scheme in reality is a political proposal of the first water. It changes the method of distributing the $2,000,000 among the 120 counties by eliminating any consideration of the population of the county. The result is that 26 counties will lose money under the deal, while the remainder will gain in sums from $50 in Christian county to over $3,000 in Livingston and others.

Approval of this change will give the Chandler campaign an opportunity to go into the counties which profit by it and point out how they managed to get more work for their rural roads. Of course, the scheme will not be popular in the other counties. That the change has some merit cannot be denied, if it is intended to give the counties with large areas more money for rural road work. That is not its avowed purpose, however. Governor Chandler called the special session for the purpose of assisting the counties which are in the depths of debt. And the change does not consider that factor, for many of the counties which would lose funds by the change are ones which really need financial assistance. For instance, McCracken county, with the largest bonded debt in the state would lose over $7,000 a year. Bell with the second largest debt, would receive $4,000 less, and Henderson Graves and several others far in the red would suffer from the Chandler proposal.

Governor Chandler has undergone considerable change in the past several weeks, indicating that being a candidate has its effect on a man. Some shining examples of how he has changed can be offered. When Kentucky school teachers suggested that the state should create a teachers' retirement system and appropriate money to make contributions by the teachers, Chandler turned thumbs down on the idea. In fact, he went so far as to declare that he did not favor passage of a bill by the 1938 legislature creating the system but leaving the matter of an appropriation up to the 1940 General Assembly. He insisted that would not be fair play with the 1940 legislators would be passing the buck to them. Becoming a candidate for the U. S. ever. He hasK w. Senate broadened his viewpoint however. He has now decided that it will be all right for this legislature to pass the act and let the 1940 legislature worry about where the money is coming from.

His candidacy, or something, also has changed Governor Chandler's attitude toward the fate of two Kentucky schools. Last December he announced that he intended to abandon the West Kentucky Industrial College for Negroes at Paducah and give the appropriation to the Kentucky State Industrial College at Frankfort. There was immediate opposition to the proposal. The Kentucky Negro Education Association went on record against it. Even County Judge Brady M. Stewart, of Paducah, who has been named Chandler's state campaign manager and State Senator Brother Melton of Paducah, who has voted as Chandler desired during his legislative career, pleaded with him to continue the Paducah school, but without succeeding. Chandler could not be budged. That was before he decided to run for the Senate, however. Now he approves an appropriation to continue the Paducah institution.

The same thing happened with reference to the John C. May school at Paintsville. He was opposed to the state taking over and operating that school when the legislature came to Frankfort this year. Editor's Note:—These articles will be presented as they come to my desk for both candidates, letting the readers judge as to their merits.

Ant Has New Foes, Effective Defense, and Great Numbers

New York.—In sheer numbers, the ants challenge imagination. They outnumber all other forms of terrestrial animals. Over 7,000 species, subspecies, and varieties have already been collected and classified.

But why is this insect so dominant? Here are some reasons: The ant is preyed upon by comparatively few other animals. The ant's most dangerous enemies are other ants. Then, too, it possesses very effective means for defense. Some ants have powerful stings, similar to the bees and the wasps, while others squirt drops of poison at their molesters. A third reason—ants have long lives. Worker ants have been known to live four to five years, while queens live as long as 13 to 15 years. During the queen's lifetime, many thousands of eggs are produced.

Workers Are Small.

The workers are the small wingless ants with which we are all acquainted. They are structurally feeble creatures for defense. The kings and queens are the sexual forms and they possess wings. During the summer, the mature kings and queens which have been developed in the nest swarm. While they are in the air, mating takes place. After mating the king dies and the queen establishes a new colony.

This is considered the typical life history, but practically every species has developed some peculiar habit characteristic of it alone.

Blind Ants of Tropics.

There are tropical ants which travel in great armies, at such as the ancient Huns or Mongols, who spend their lives destroying nests of others and killing all insects in their way. These ants are blind so that the size of an object in their path means nothing to them. Holes in the ground are entered, tall trees are climbed. Even human dwellings are invaded in great army. When such an army enters a house, the owner must temporarily surrender. But he can be sure that when the ants leave, all the cockroaches, spiders, rats and other vermin life shall have been devoured or driven away.

There are other species of ants which have such large mouthparts that they are able to feed themselves and must be waited upon. They gather slaves by raiding the nests of other ants and carrying home the young. When these young reach maturity, they serve their captors.

Linoleum, Maple, Rubber for Workroom Flooring

Washington. — Linoleum, fluted maple and rubber outlasted concrete and asphalt in tests here to determine the best kind of flooring material for post office workrooms.

Conducted by Warren E. Emley and C. E. Hofer of the national board of standards at the request of the procurement division of the Treasury department, tests revealed that the three materials can take the pounding of 1,500-pound trucks with small iron wheels better than can materials generally used for street paving.

Five samples of concrete were among the 20 samples tried. Mr. Emley indicated. A truck of the type used in the post office for hauling bags of mail was run 60,000 times around a 40-foot track to see which material lasted longest.

Future post office construction, it is expected, will take cognizance of the test's results. Mr. Emley warned, however, that the tests apply only to the special conditions of the small-wheeled heavy trucks found in post offices.

Mount Whitney Still Is Highest in United States

Washington.—Mount Whitney is still the highest mountain in continental United States, but the third and fourth places have been interchanged as a result of recent surveys by the coast and geodetic survey. The new heights for the five highest peaks in the United States are:

Mount Whitney, California, 14,495 feet, lost 1 foot. Mount Massive, Colorado, 14,242 feet, gained 5 feet. Mount Elbert, Colorado, 14,420 feet, lost 11 feet. Mount Rainier, Washington, 14,408 feet, same. Mount Harvard, Colorado, 14,375 feet, lost 24 feet.

The gains and losses are not actual. The change in height is due to more accurate leveling surveys since the last set of altitudes was announced in 1936.

Bad Mastodon Teeth

Buffalo, N. Y.—Mastodons, the prehistoric elephants that roamed North America during the Ice age, suffered from toothache and a gum ailment like pyorrhea, a study of the bones of the Richmond mastodon, dug up from a bog in Indiana some seven years ago, has just revealed.

Boone County Farm Notes

A tobacco referendum to decide whether quotas on Burley tobacco will be in effect in 1938 will likely be held in the next few weeks.

The general features of tobacco marketing quotas, if put in effect, are being discussed at the community Agricultural Conservation Program meetings.

divided in two groups; group I clubs in communities with high schools and group II clubs in communities with the elementary grades. The old standby for afternoon lunches was jam. We had a supply if I remember correctly, that somehow lasted from season. Cold biscuits and blackberry jam may not sound palatable to highly sensitive ones, but if you have lived on the farm in other days and come home from school starved to death, you know why jam and bread even now can stir memories.

A sweet tooth was often satisfied with molasses candy. Just how to make it so it will have the proper hardness is a secret I never acquired partly because I always ate my candy up before it got through pulling it. But I have eaten it when a professional candy-maker would have had nothing to add to its goodness. Popcorn balls made with molasses candy can also remove starvation a few more paces.

These are some of the things that all taste good, after all the years. How coarse they must seem to some people, but how exquisite to those of us who grew up when food was so full up and satisfy!

1938 Farm Program Meetings Well Attended

The Community meetings on the 1938 Agricultural Conservation Program and 1938 Farm Act held the past week were well attended. The response shown by farmers at the meetings shows they are vitally interested in Agricultural Improvement and important problems in relation to farm work.

While information on the new farm act was just received at the county office recently, every effort is being made to inform farmers at the earliest possible date. The schedule of community meetings on the new farm program to be held during this week are as follows:

Florence school, Friday, March 25 at 7:30 p. m. (slow time).

Constance school, Thursday, Mar. 31, at 7:30 p. m. (slow time).

Everyone is invited to attend.

Homemakers Interested In Making Gloves

A group of women interested in learning how to make leather gloves visited Miss Mary K. Massey, Home Demonstration Agent of Vevey, Ind. recently. Homemakers of Switzerland County, Indiana, have been successful in making suede and capskin gloves for men, women and children.

Miss Massey had patterns and samples of materials for the Boone women. She demonstrated the easiest method of making hand sewn gloves. The material averages one dollar a pair.

The following women went to Vevey: Mrs. Carol Cropper, Mrs. Jack Cleek, Mrs. Bertha Conrad and Mary Hood Gillespie, Home demonstration agent. This group plans to meet within a short time to make chambré gloves.

Blue Ribbon 4-H Club Hold Organization Meeting

The farm project group of Burlington Blue Ribbon 4-H club held

Twenty-three members were enrolled in the tobacco project. We also have a good enrollment in the other projects. We are looking for a banner year in 4-H club work.

Taylorport 4-H Club Meets

The first community meeting for 1938 of the Taylorport "One and For All 4-H Club" was held March 1, with an enrollment of 17 members.

The officers elected were Virgil Humphrey, president; Melvin McArthur, vice president; Nelda Sprague, secretary; Emma Sprague, cheer and song leader, and Martin Aylor Jr., Sargent at arms. The projects selected were poultry, clothing and foods. Miss Cora Lutes was chosen community leader; J. H. Sprague, leader of poultry project; Mrs. Earl Morehead, leader of clothing project and Mrs. Miles Berry leader of foods project.

Barkley's Weekly News Letter

I have been tempted many times to write a little column concerning public matters in Washington for weekly distribution among the newspapers of Kentucky. Many members of Congress in both the Senate and House act as a sort of voluntary correspondent for large groups of papers in their States which do not have press representatives in the National Capitol, and thus they attempt to bring their readers information and comment which may now and then be of interest and value to those who are interested in public questions. I have no ambition to become a columnist, though I have always maintained that, outside the ministry, the editors of, or contributors to, a newspaper occupy a broader field for good or bad, and service to society than almost any other person. My present venture in this field was suggested by newspaper friends of long standing. Whether the venture is of any value I can not say, but I am attempting it with the understanding that these brief letters will make no reference to any campaign and no one is under obligation to publish them or to read them.

As might be expected the National Capitol at present is on tip-toes over the most recent development in Europe. Ever since Adolf Hitler has obtained control of Germany it has been known that he was pursuing a definite program of economic penetration into the smaller countries of Central Europe, while at the same time demanding the return of German colonies lost as a result of the World War.

But apparently no one in official life in America or Europe was prepared for his sudden coup of the past week by which Austria was absorbed and annexed to Germany. This coup is not likely to involve the United States in any international complication. While the people of America are interested in its development, that involves the violation of treaties, they are not willing to go to war to keep Germany from absorbing Austria, or of the other small European countries.

It is doubtful whether even the democratic nations of Europe, such as England or France, will do so. Protests have been made but they received the same consideration that was received by protests against the invasion of China by Japan.

What the ultimate results will be only the future can reveal; but whatever the results, history is being made in a "big-way," not only in Europe but all over the world. The American Government may be expected to continue its efforts to maintain and restore peace, maintain and protect the rights of our people and the dignity and respect of our Nation, and to keep ourselves free from any entanglements that would drag us beyond the realm of our interests or our duty.

The "Mormon Battalion" On July 29, 1846, the "Mormon Battalion" began, at Kanewville (now Council Bluffs), Ia., a march which, in part, was later to be followed by a transcontinental railway and thus was to mark the way for one of the great lines of communication between the Atlantic and the Pacific. Many of the men—who, says one writer, presented an appearance which was "half-patriarchal, half-military"—were accompanied by their wives and children. Bivouacking southwest, they crossed the perilous desert between the Arkansas and the Cimarron and entered Santa Fe early in October. Leaving the women and children here, the battalion set out for California and, after overcoming insurmountable difficulties, reached San Diego late in January, 1847.

FOR WOMEN ONLY

Five feet, six inches is the average height of the English woman.

Women seldom were seen on the stage until the Eighteenth century.

Women are employed as operators on all street cars in Valparaiso, Chile.

Women outshine the men in oral examinations for jury service in Buffalo, N. Y.

Women in other lands spent over $500,000 in the past year for lipsticks made in America.

Women do about nine-tenths of the retail buying in the United States, a financial corporation reports.

Mothers with young babies can go and listen to the service in a London church which has installed a glass-walled balcony.

A total of 64,994 American career women belong to the 1,505 clubs of the International Federation of Business and Professional Women.

1938 Spring Hats Will Be 'Saneer'—Or Will They?

Spring stylists are getting more level-headed about hats, so they say. This collection proves them both right and wrong. You can draw your own conclusions about the little feathered bonnet worn above by Rita Johnson of the movies. The skyscraper quill is bright blue.

Rita changes to a tight-fitting little number that's given added height by a colorful bouquet of spring flowers. The soft veil adds "luxury." Nice, we'd say.

But wait a minute. What's this? Betty Furness, also of the movies dons a "nose-length" veil sprinkled with sequin flowers, fastened on top of her head with a handmade rose in cerise. This isn't a spring hat, really. It's for formal dinner wear, which makes us breathe easier.

Here comes Betty Furness in something less startling and more springlike. John Fredericks designed this number, a dusty pink hat with a blue sate band around the edge. The crown is high and a soft veil covers the face. What's your verdict... are 1938 hats better or worse?

Pigs Surpass All in Rapid Growth

Porker Is Fastest-Maturing Farm Animal; Must Avoid a Breakdown.

By Dr. L. A. Maynard, New York State College of Agriculture—NYU Syracuse. The pig is the fastest-growing farm animal and the greatest profit in pork raising is made by maximum growth at an early age. In this growth bone development is just as important as flesh formation. Unless the pig receives adequate calcium and phosphorus, either the rate of growth will be delayed or, more usually, increase in weight will continue normally until the underdeveloped bones can no longer support the added flesh.

Then a breakdown occurs. The weak bones snap, the tendons break, or the joints are affected. In all instances the pig becomes lame, gradually loses the use of its legs, falls off in weight, and finally dies unless relief is given through a change in ration.

A Cornell bulletin tells how to guard against this trouble and how to meet the mineral needs of the pig. He says knowledge of the mineral needs of farm animals has increased markedly during the past few years, both by experiment and practical observation on farms. Some of the earlier beliefs have been modified, and new solutions to problems found.

Farm Boy Finds Wood Lot as Source of Profit

An awakening interest in farm forestry is being shown by the increasing number of 4-H boys who have forest projects on their home farms, says E. W. Tinker, assistant chief forester of the United States Forest Service. At the national 4-H camp in Washington this summer, nine of the young men had had farm forestry as a project—nearly double the usual number.

It is said conservatively, says Tinker, that a good windbreak or shelterbelt, or grove of forest trees adds at least a thousand dollars to the value of any farm. Forty-one states, with Forest Service co-operation, already are furnishing trees at nominal cost for general farm planting.

Census figures show that the products from farm woods rank among the first 10 crops in total farm income in the United States. By careful appraisal of land and trees the farmer and his sons often find new possibilities of profit.

Forestry, like charity, says Tinker, begins at home, and makes itself felt far and wide.

Feeding Brood Sows

Sows that will soon be farrowing should be put on a light grain ration in order to have them gaining weight at the time they are bred, says C. C. Culbertson, Iowa State college. This will tend to increase the number of pigs in each litter. In addition to grain, a good protein supplement of one-half gallon of skim milk or buttermilk or one-half pound of tankage per animal per day should be included in the ration. It is a good practice to keep a mineral mixture before the sows during this period. During pregnancy the sows should be fed just heavy enough to keep them in good condition.

Fall Seeding Timothy

In fall seeding timothy, the Ohio experiment station recommends letting the seed fall broadcast on top of the soil from the grass seed box of the drill, at the rate of about six pounds per acre. Let the drill hooves or discs down as if wheat were being sown. Letting nature cover the seed when sown at this time has given a better stand than covering with a weeder or cultipacker. The ridges thrown up by the drill apparently afford some protection during the winter to the small timothy seedlings which come up thickly in the drill rows.

Beauty Culturist Attends International Convention

"The services of beauty shop are as necessary to the American Miss and Matron today as a clean shave is to a man," says Neil Craig, beauty culturist of 420 Garvey avenue, Elmhurst, who is now preparing to leave for New York City to attend the 1937 International Beauty Shop Owners Convention and Exhibition that will be held in that city under the direction of Joseph Byrne, from March 21st to the 24th.

While in New York at the International Convention, Mrs. Craig will join with more than 20,000 other beauty culturists from all parts of the United States and Europe in discussing and developing the improved methods and ideas in all branches of beauty culture, such as permanent waving, hair dyeing, skin treatments, modern makeup, scientific facials, modern hair styling and beauty cultivation in general. Mrs. Craig says that every beauty culturist owes it to her clients to strive constantly to improve her knowledge of her profession, to do continual research work. "Perfection can never be attained," she concluded, "but through constant research we can come as close to it as is humanly possible."

Resolutions of Respect—

Resolutions adopted by the Board of Directors of Verona Bank, Verona, Ky., at the regular board meeting held March 2, 1937.

There was a vacant seat by the death of our beloved associate, W. M. Whitson, who has been President of this Bank since its organization in 1903, and has given his ability and time to the welfare of our institution. The remaining members of the board are deeply grieved over their great loss in such a valued uniting and able leader.

Now therefore the following resolution is adopted:

Be it resolved that in the passing of W. M. Whitson, the Verona Bank has lost a very valuable officer whose place will be hard to fill, that Boone County has lost one of its most honorable and upright citizens and that his family has lost a kind and affectionate husband and father.

Be it further resolved that a copy of these resolutions be printed in the Walton Advertiser and Boone County Recorder, a copy sent to the bereaved family and a copy spread on the minutes of the Verona Bank.

W. T. Renaker,

2 Services In Charge Of CCC Camp Work

Camp Personnel And Their Duties Listed For Benefit Of Our Readers

The Walton CCC Camp was started July 17, 1935. It has two official buildings, the CCC Camp Company No. 3541, and the Department of Agriculture's is Camp SCS-5-Ky. The SCS-5-Ky is Camp No. 5 in Kentucky in the Soil Conservation Service under the United States Department of Agriculture.

In the direction and work supervision of the Camp there are two services in charge. They are closely associated and yet each performs entirely different duties.

The Army: Under this heading come the Commanding Officer, the Junior Officer, the Doctor, who is sometimes an Army Officer, at other times a local physician, an educational advisor and a traveling dentist. At regular intervals the camp is inspected by officers of higher rank sometimes even by the 7th Army Corps Area Commander, General Cole.

It is the duty of the Army personnel to clothe, feed, furnish, entertain, amuse, give medical and dental attention, maintain sanitary conditions, discipline and pay the boys, known as enrollees. This is quite a large order. If you don't think so try handling from 150 to 200 of our young American boys now.

The Army also holds church services once a week and also safety meetings once a week at which the SCS or Technical Service assists in educating the boys in safe methods to be used in all phases of work.

The Soil Conservation Service or "Technical Service." It is their duty to furnish work to be done by the boys under their immediate supervision. The enrollees are taught modern and safe methods of performing the various classes of work and the reasons why said work is being done. There is some special reason for each type of work.

Education and Job Training is another phase of the program. In this the Army Officers, Educational Advisor, and Technical Service collaborate to outline and deliver well rounded and diversified educational program suited to the many types of enrollee students.

A list of the camp personnel and their duties is as follows:

1st Lieutenant B. L. Jackson, Company Commander, is responsible for the welfare, conduct and discipline of the camp, as well as all funds.

2nd Lieutenant A. M. Henderson, Second in Command, and is responsible for all finances and funds and when the Commanding Officer is absent has his responsibilities.

Raymond Trautman, Camp Educational Advisor, is in charge of education.

Dr. F. E. Bedinger, Company Physician, is in charge of physical condition of enrollees and the sanitation of camp area.

Ward T. Darnell, Camp Superintendent, is in charge of the Technical activities and is responsible to the Soil Conservation Service.

Douglas B. Redman, Camp Agronomist and Contact Man, is in charge of all agreements and contracts and programs outlined for the farms and farmers on which work is to be done or has been done.

W. E. Williams, Camp Engineer is in charge of construction work being done or to be done on farms under agreement.

Foremen John L. Allen, Thomas C. Mason, C. M. Lykins, and J. S. Sizemore, are in immediate charge of the field work and each is in charge of a crew of enrollees consisting of from 30 to 40 men with one leader (enrollee) and two assistant leaders (enrollees).

Cleland S. Clayton, Camp Mechanic, is in charge of maintenance and repair of all equipment used by the field crews and also the tools they use.

Mommon L. Wines, Assistant to the Technicians, is at present in charge of the writing and compilation of agreements in the office.

There are four (4) Camp Assistants in this camp—Arthur R. Stevens, in charge of Records and Reports, Thomas P. Moore, in charge of the Mapping Crew, James F. Chapman in charge of the tools, and Wilson Ward, Assistant to the Camp Mechanic.

A great number of the above personnel live here in Walton, with their families. A careful check has been made recently to determine just how much of the income of this camp is expended in the city of Walton. It was found that a conservative average estimate of the amount spent by the entire camp in Walton alone was $3,000 per month.

This article has been written with the idea of clarifying the purpose and objectives of the Walton CCC Camp in the minds of people in the vicinity of the Camp Area.

The Waltonian 4-H Club Meets

The Waltonian 4-H Club met on March 22, 1937, in the Walton-Verona High School, to hold its second meeting of the year. There were twenty-four members present. Mrs. J. G. Pennington and Mrs. W. H. King were visitors and Mrs. H. P. Baker and J. G. Pennington, leaders, were also present. Mr. Dyer, new Assistant leader, Mr. Furkner and Miss Mary H. Gillespie attended too—Mildred King, Reporter.

Charles Carlisle is able to be out and around after being confined to his home for almost a month.

AFTER THOUGHTS

By GEORGE

The first day of Spring ushered in with a very fine spring day. The weatherman is running very true to form and I hope it keeps it. The farmers will be able to get some of their Spring work done.

The Firemen's basketball game was well attended and from both the opponents and firemen's point of view was very successful. The folks saw some basketball and I think were well awarded for their presence.

The opening of the James Theatre Thursday night was really a big event. As quite a few people were in attendance and they received a surprise of their life. There cannot be enough said as to the beauty of the place. The people should feel proud of this building as this is what gives prestige to towns, especially of this size.

In 1900 only one person in ten had a life insurance policy in this country, and one-six had a savings account. A recent survey shows that now every other person has both. People are becoming more thoughtful all the time.

The Reds are sure knocking over the opponents in the Grapefruit league. We are hoping that they don't do all of their hitting and winning of games down south before the season opens.

Monday, the 21st would have been the anniversary of the "Gladiator of the American Girl," Ploem Ziegfeld, producer of all time. If living he would have been 69 years of age.

Kentucky sold 71 percent of all the tobacco sold in the United States. Amount sold was 299,842,839. For an average of a little over $30.00 per lb. average.

The editors contribution to our column this week.

The people of Walton are interested in the improvement of the Dixie Highway. It is 8-29, but do not believe the road should miss the town, so the speed maniacs from other states could cross the state with their full tanks of gas. We still believe that it will take more than a song and dance before the project is completed.

An epidemic of spring fever took the town by storm Tuesday.

The sure way to start a boycott in a community is to start a speed trap.

One of the hi-light of the Parents-Teachers game will be the Mammy Cheering Squad. The quick stepping cheer leader being Mammy Gerlie Pennington will lead the Mammys through their cheer yell and songs. Come out and hear Mammy Johnson and Mammy Arnold do their stuff.

Soil Conservation Increases Wildlife

Farmers More Interested In This Feature Says Ward T. Darnell

Because good agricultural practices are in harmony with nature's own plan for furnishing food and cover for wildlife, adoption of soil conservation practices is one way of furnishing food and cover for wildlife population, according to Ward T. Darnell, superintendent of CCC camp SCS-5-Ky.

His comment, made in connection with National Wild Life Week March 20-27, declared that farmers in general are becoming more and more interested in the wildlife features of the soil conservation program being developed in Boone County and Gallatin county.

Adoption of such soil-saving measures as gully control with the use of shrubs and trees, cover crops and woodland protection encourage birdlife which, in turn, minimizes the insect menace, in addition to conserving the soil, he said.

In addition to the more common soil conservation measures, Mr. Darnell said, the farmer may adopt many practices that are direct boost to wildlife. He urged that waste areas be seeded and protected from cattle, and that the farmer not cultivate too close to streams or to fence rows.

President Roosevelt, in his proclamation establishing National Wild Life Week, urged Americans to become game-conservation conscious.

"I call upon all citizens of the field forest, and water and intelligent conservation of the best means for translating good intentions into practical action in behalf of these invaluable friends," he said.

TWO PERSONS KILLED WHEN FAST L. & N. TRAIN HITS TRUCK LAST FRIDAY

Frank Norman and Daughter, Hallie, Are Victims

FUNERALS MONDAY

Attended By One Of Largest Crowds Ever Seen In Walton

One of Walton's worst tragedies occurred last Friday morning, when the fast L. & N. passenger train Pan American, crashed into the small truck of Frank Norman, killing him and his daughter, Miss Hallie Norman, almost instantly, at the railroad crossing near the Walton Lumber Co.

Miss Norman and her father were doing some collection work for the Walton Methodist Church when the accident occurred. James Coyle and J. E. Conrad, employees of the Walton Lumber Co., saw the crash, and said Mr. Norman stopped the truck but too late, the locomotive crashing into the side of it, dragging it down the track and killing the occupants, and completely demolishing the vehicle.

The bodies were removed to the Chambers and Grubbs Funeral Home for preparation, and laid in state there until funeral services were held on Monday. Some 700 persons visiting the home to view the remains.

At the double funeral services at 2 o'clock, Monday afternoon, about 500 persons were present, and some were unable to gain entrance to the Walton Methodist Church, where the services were held.

Rev. R. R. Rose, pastor of the church, had charge of the services, and was assisted by Rev. O. E. Traylor of Newport, and Rev. D. E. Bedinger of Walton. A large choir of mixed voices rendered two appropriate numbers, and Rev. and Mrs. R. M. Baldwin of Hughes Chapel, sang a very pretty duet. And the floral offerings, of which there were many, were most beautiful.

Following the services at the church, the bodies were taken to the Richmond Cemetery for interment. Chambers and Grubbs had charge of the arrangements.

Mr. Norman, age 68, was born in Boone County, where he lived his entire life, and was a member of the Walton M. E. Church. He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Virgie Norman; a son, Claude Norman; two daughters, two brothers, and other relatives and friends.

Miss Hallie Norman, age 38, was also born in this county. She was a member of the same church, and only recently was made Church treasurer. She led a most beautiful Christian life, and her passing is a great loss to the entire congregation. She is survived by her mother and brother, eight uncles, seven aunts, and other relatives and a host of friends.

The pallbearers for Mr. Norman were Clarence Norman, Robert Norman, William Norman, Clifford Norman, Tom Marshall and William Marshall.

For Miss Norman, the pallbearers were O. C. Jones, Joe Jones, Henry Norman, June Rosebrook, Elmore Norman and Charles Kuester.

The following were the floral carriers: Bertha Lancaster, Mildred Jones, Sara Bell Norman, Ellen Rosebrook, Selma Darnell, Florence Elmore, Viola Jones and Louise Conrad.

Returned From Hospital—

Miss Alberta Holbrook, daughter of Lewis Holbrook of Williamstown was taken home in the ambulance of Coates, Stewart and Hedger from St. Elizabeth Hospital, Sunday 27th where she had gone for operation for appendicitis. She is improving and soon will be out again.

And his daughter, Miss Hallie C. Norman, were killed almost instantly at the dangerous L. & N. Railroad crossing near the Walton Lumber Co., when a fast passenger train crashed into their truck.

Miss Norman and her father were doing some collection work for the Methodist Church and had approached the crossing slowly, but were unable to see the train because a car obstructed the view until the front wheels were on the track.

Two employees of the Lumber Company, James Coyle and Robert Conrad, who saw the accident, said Mr. Norman had stopped the truck but it was too late, the engine crashing into the side of it, dragging it down the track and killing the occupants almost instantly.

This is two more additions to the fast growing list of our citizens who have come to their untimely end because of there being no warning light, bell or watchman at these crossings with obstructed views, and new fast speeding locomotives.

It might be recalled that on other occasions not far past that John English of this place was killed in a similar accident at the crossing in the north end of town, and Jim Aylor was also killed while walking across the tracks at the crossing near the Falls Pilling Station, while numerous other persons have been hurt at these crossings.

Mr. Norman was a life long citizen of Boone County, and was a well liked man; which fact was demonstrated at the Methodist Church where hundreds of people were unable to get inside to see the beautiful services held Monday afternoon of this week.

We wonder how long it will be before those death dealing engines will be slowed down, running over the surface of unguarded crossings of our highways and streets in this "hate makes waste" in which the next victims might be the loved ones of anyone of our families.

Boone County Utopia Club

Meets At Burlington Court House,
March 24

The Boone County Utopia Club held its monthly meeting March 24 in the Burlington courthouse.

The boys and girls met separately and each planned their meetings for the future. The girls are all set with their orders for beads in which to make some of their summer accessories. Their plans are to take the handicraft course for four months and pass on to another interesting subject.

The boys discussed Hybrid seed corn for this year. Some have made applications for Kentucky 69 white but find the supply is limited. However, they will be able to secure the yellow hybrid seed corn.

The meeting was opened with an introduction to the new assistant county agent, Mr. Dye, his wife Mrs. Dye and a visitor.

Mr. Dye gave us a very interesting report on their day spent at the District meeting held at Warsaw last month, February 19.

Lloyd Siskman then gave a talk on the trip to the stock yards March 23rd and added that everyone should make this trip if ever possible. Lloyd also took up the landscaping discussion which Miss Gillespie had started.

Each Utopia member enjoyed the folk games so much at Warsaw that it was voted upon and carried that at the next meeting April 21st an hour will be spent by learning these folk games directed by Mr. Carl Jones of Lexington.

The recreation of the evening was furnished by Frances Siskman and the Hebron group was in charge of refreshments.

Two Bearcats On All-N. Ky. Team

Osborn and Chapman
Chosen—DeMoisey
Also Named

Two players from the Walton-Vernon Bearcats have been picked on the All-Northern Kentucky basketball team. The boys chosen were Homer Lee Osborn and Jimmy Chapman. The honor was bestowed on the boys Saturday night following the Blind Tourney held at the Albion Heights Gym. Besides Osborn and Chapman, others on the team were Sanders, Newport; Hudson Covington; Dumford; Bellevue; Henry, Erlanger, Mosey, Highland and Haas, Newport.

The Blind Tournament, sponsored by the Buffalo club and the Kentucky Post, was composed of teams from the Boone county Little Six and Suburban conferences and the unaffiliated schools, and consisted of two players from each school—the cream of the crop.

The Little Six Conference was the winner, defeating the Boone county Conference 44 to 38 in the final Saturday night. Previously the Conference teams had defeated the unaffiliated team and the Suburban Conference squad. The Little Six defeated the unaffiliated 60 to 43, and the Boone county downed the Suburban 28 to 18.

Scoring honors of the tourney went to Hudson of Covington, with 29 points. Henry of Erlanger was second with 28 tallies, and Osborn of Walton was third with 25 points.

Boone county fans should be proud of the achievements of Osborn and Jimmy. It is quite an honor to the Bearcats and the Boone county Conference, to have two of their native sons named on this All-Northern Kentucky squad. On fact we should say three native sons, as DeMoisey is a Waltonian, only last fall being transplanted to Highlands.

The Civilian Conservation Corps Celebrates

Education In The CCC

Program Adapted To Fit Needs, Interests and Ability of Enrollee

To date more than 2 million young men have gone through the CCC. Most of them were between 18 and 21 years of age. From the outset the education and training of Civilian Conservation Corps enrollees has been considered of great importance. Life in camp affords many opportunities for practical training and adjustment. It supplies the young men with a new outlook on life, a chance to work, to receive occupational training, to become acquainted with good books, to work under capable leadership, and to learn how to live among other men.

The CCC educational program has been carried out through the cooperation of the camp educational advisers, members of the camp Army staff, and the technical advisory staff. In order that the camp program might be as effective as possible, every effort is made to secure experienced and adaptable educational advisers. In addition the 1,500 advisers there are now more than 20,000 persons offering organized instruction to the enrollees. There are in a camp six or seven men from the technical staff, such as engineer, agronomist, foreman, mechanic, who give their own time after work hours to instruction. They will also be instructors from among the advanced enrollees, WPA teachers and a part-time teacher from a nearby community. On the average each camp has about 17 instructors.

Four years of experience with thousands of young men have helped the camp personnel to form a clear concept of what education should mean to the vast number of men who reach the camps. A study of the background of the enrollees reveals that these men come from all types of communities, educational levels and work experience. Many of them are in a camp for the first time. Thirty-nine percent did not complete the elementary grade and 3 percent were functionally illiterate. More than two-thirds have never received any systematic training before reaching camp. A report of the Department of Labor indicates that about 25 percent of the enrollees never held any kind of a job prior to entering camp, and of those who had some previous employment, the average had been jobless for more than 5 months before entering the CCC.

In dealing with each enrollee therefore, the program of training and education must be suited to his level and to fit his needs, interests and ability. Since the camp training program is voluntary, it must be made not only worthwhile, but as interesting as possible. Each enrollee is shown how the camp program will help him to meet his problems and how it will aid him to plan a more satisfactory future for himself after he leaves the Corps. Proof of the interest at present more than 87 percent of the enrollees, by their own choice, are regularly participating in educational and training activities.

Shortly after his arrival in the camp the enrollee is interviewed by the advisor to determine his previous training and experience, as well as his aptitude needs, and interests. On the basis of this interview, the enrollee's program of training is planned and developed. Counseling and guidance, therefore, form the foundation of CCC education.

Since 1933 more than 50,000 have been taught to read and write. More than 500,000 boys have become better rounded in grade-school subjects. Another 200,000 have studied high-school subjects and many have received their high school diplomas. About 50,000 have pursued college courses while in the camps, and 7 number have been granted scholarships in colleges and universities throughout the country. The CCC and various institutions of learning.

classifications or vocations broken down into many hundreds of smaller jobs which may be taught on these work projects. In addition, the administration of the camp offers valuable training and experience in such jobs as store management, stenography, cooking and truck driving.

The training received on the job is supplemented by evening classes in carpentry, auto mechanics, surveying, store masonry, mechanical drawing, concrete construction, agriculture, radio repairing, photography and other similar projects. About 46 percent of the enrollees were receiving this instruction to supplement the skill acquired on the job. Altogether approximately 1,000,000 enrollees have received job-training instruction.

Camp classes are run principally on a discussion basis with a minimum of lecturing. As nearly as possible, each class is centered around some practical project. For example, the forestry work being done; the surveying class revolves around the work of a field party; landscape studies are based upon the work project; the English class centers around the camp newspaper; the arithmetic class around the carpentry or concrete work, and the local current events class around the local current events in the academic and training courses regular use is made of slides, exhibits, charts, graphs and when practicable, speeches by individuals not connected with the camps.

The CCC has constantly been aware of its responsibility to help enrollees find satisfactory employment. Enrollees are advised as to the best methods of applying for work and locating job leads. Approximately 470,000 former CCC boys are now employed in private industry. Many fill their jobs more satisfactorily because of training received in the CCC.

The educational work of the CCC combined with the method of training on the job, has proven the most effective means of converting the thousands of jobless and often homeless youths into a better citizen and happier individuals. Their day of enforced idleness have become busy and useful. Their discouragement at lack of jobs or training has vanished before the worthwhile work they have done in the camps and the position many of them have obtained in private industry after leaving the CCC. New habits, new interests, have fostered self-reliance and developed latent abilities. They have learned to adopt themselves to a group life instead of expecting life to adapt itself to them and their needs.

CCC Celebrates Fifth Anniversary

Tour, Burgoon, Talks Of Celebration And Exhibits Part

Five birthday candles will gleam at the Walton CCC camp on April 2nd, and the camp will pause momentarily from its work of demonstrating soil conservation methods. The Civilian Conservation Corps will be five years old that week.

Plans for an open house include a tour of representative farms in the area, an old-fashioned burgoon at the camp, a program to include talks by the supervisory personnel, and exhibits of work. That the public may see life in a typical CCC camp, Lieut. Bennett L. Jackson, commanding officer, has thrown open the barracks, recreation hall, and other buildings for inspection.

Because soil erosion affects people as well as agricultural lands, Superintendent Ward T. Darnell has invited residents of Covington, Walton, Waverly, Burlington, Independence, and other nearby cities to attend the open house and to accompany the group on the tour. The tour will start from the camp at 10 o'clock, and will take about two hours, Darnell said. Transportation will be furnished by the Soil Conservation Service. The party will visit farms of J. B. Doan and I. I. Caldwell.

birthday observance. He hailed this trend toward strip farming as the outstanding achievement of the camps since its establishment in August, 1933.

More than 10,000 acres of agricultural lands in Northern Kentucky will be farmed in contour strip fashion under present cooperative agreements, Darnell announced. This number includes only acreage under agreement with the Falmouth project and the Walton and Carlisle camps, and does not show the large areas outside these areas who have voluntarily adopted this type of soil conservation.

The 1937 march of progress in the erosion-control field in the Walton camp area may be summed up in four words—greater dependence on vegetation, Darnell said. This trend toward vegetation, he explained, will mean more economical and effective soil-saving methods.

Erosion control operations in the area, which includes portions of Kenton, Boone, Grant, Pendleton and Gallatin counties, have been expanded to include 71 cooperating farmers, covering approximately 10,000 acres.

Under existing agreements, cooperating farmers have agreed to cultivate 3,700 acres on the contour and to strip crop more than 3,000 acres in the camp area. Other erosion control practices include installation of buffer strips and a more widespread adoption of cover crops. Slopes too steep or too eroded for profitable cultivation are being reseeded to permanent pasture or woodland.

Much of the camp's labor has been devoted to fence construction, since field rearrangement is an important part of the contour system of farming.

ing, Darnell explained. Enrollees of more than 12,000 rods—about 40 miles—of fencing since the camp began field work. The fences are built to rearrange fields for strip cropping or contour cultivation, protect new seedlings, or to keep livestock out of farm woodlands.

A greater percent of the camp area will be covered with timber within a few years, Darnell predicts. He refers to the worn-out fields that have been left idle. The percentage of idle land on cooperating fields has been reduced considerably, and therein lies the tale of what happened to 440,000 trees. He reports that this number of trees has been planted in fields and on eroded fields and idle slopes.

More logums, especially alfalfa mixtures, are being used in farm replanting by the Soil Conservation Service, to build up organic matter in the soil and to turn prevent soil erosion in active gullies. Soil soils are being treated with agricultural lime stone.

Mechanical methods of retarding soil losses have included construction of diversion ditches to control water in critical locations, and construction of temporary check dams in active gullies. Contour furrows have been constructed on pasture land to hold the water and thus increase penetration into the soil. Lengthening of rotations to include more meadows is another outstanding achievement of the camp.

"A number of CCC camps are being discontinued this month," Darnell said, "but the Walton camp is keeping right on demonstrating soil and moisture conservation. We consider this a tribute not to the camp but to the warm cooperation shown by farmers, and to civic pride shown by Walton."

History Of CCC Company 3541

Was Established July 17, 1935

On July 17, 1935, twenty-three members forming the cadre in command of Captain Adams and Lieutenant Schied arrived at 2:45 p. m. in Walton, Kentucky, with four truck loads of equipment to start CCC Company 3541.

The camp-site chosen was the ball park owned by John L. Vest. On the grounds were pitched five tents for the quarter the enrollees and officers. The grandstand was temporarily converted into a kitchen and the first meal served was the faithful corn beef. In the absence of a well-house, permission was secured from the local school authorities to use the showers. For the balance of the month of July and August work was continued on the ditch for a water main, power line construction telephone installed and additional tents erected for the newcomers.

On August 8th, one hundred and fifty-two replacements arrived from Covington, Kentucky. Given a complete physical examination and their first inoculations, the new men were assigned to tents and administered the oath of the Civilian Conservation Corps. Seventeen local boys of Walton, Kentucky, were also accepted for enlistment in the camp.

On a Monday morning seventeen car loads of lumber arrived over the L. and N. Railroad from Albany, Georgia, for the construction of the buildings now on the camp grounds. Work was started immediately and considerable local employment was used so that the buildings would be complete before the cold weather set in. The material arrived in sections and the first erection was the mess-hall.

November 30, 1935, was a highly memorable day in this company. The flag of our country was flown from the sixty-foot steel flagpole which on this day had been erected. Each morning at daybreak the flag is hoisted to wave over the camp, and at sundown lowered while the members of the camp pay their respects.

A year after the camp was organized the first company dance was held. The music was furnished by a Cincinnati orchestra and everyone had a good time. This was the first in a series of public affairs held at the camp.

At present there are one hundred and fifty-nine boys in camp. Of these boys twelve from West Virginia, three are from Ohio, and one hundred and fifty-five are from the native state of Kentucky. First Lieutenant Bennett L. Jackson is the Commanding Officer and Second

Controlled Runoff Of Rainfall

On Farm of Ernest Grey, Grant County

In the fall of 1936 during drought relief work planned and supervised by the Soil Conservation Service, Technicians, some diversion furrows for controlled runoff and a permanent outlet for a pond were constructed on Ernest Gray's farm in southern Grant County.

This plan is rather elaborate but is an excellent example of what can be done at low cost to control rainfall runoff in the hills of Northern Kentucky.

These furrows were laid off on a grade sufficient to carry runoff into old fence row with heavy sod and then down this to a paved channel into the pond. A step-down paved flume was constructed for permanent outlet. The bottom of this a stilling basin was made. Immediately below the flume Mr. Grey poured a concrete watering trough fed from the pond through a pipe with a cutoff valve on the wet side. In the rough is a float-valve for automatic refilling. This area including the entire fill of the pond and the diversion furrows in the drainage area above was fenced off by Ernest Grey. In June 1937, W. K. Williams, Camp Engineer, who designed and supervised this work, made an inspection and found everything in good order. The furrows had carried the heavy fall rains of January 1937 with only a few small breaks. Only about a cubic yard of silt had been deposited in the pond, and the blue grass in the field was knee high and heavy green.

Diversion Ditch Controls Gullies

One Kentucky farmer who had been trying to control gullies on his land for years finally succeeded in doing so by one easy method—a diversion ditch.

He is R. H. Stephenson. He owns a hill farm near Dry Ridge, which despite its name, is not so dry after all, for much of it is water. Injured through a 3-acre ridge into a natural rock outlet, instead of letting it run unchecked over his pasture field. He used a V-drag, a turning plow, four horses, and two men—and it took his one day to build it.

In January, 1937, more than fifteen inches of rain fell on the farm. Darnell relates. After the rainy period he found that not even the trash and leaves had washed out of the gullies, much less the soil. But on adjoining hillsides that weren't protected, old gullies were scored to rock bottom.

Mr. Stephenson has this to say: "In one year's time it has saved three times the labor it cost."

Parker has replanned his farm include 104 acres of contour tillage of which 87 acres will be farmed in strips. He has also lengthened rotation to four years, including years of meadow. Other soil conservation practices he has adopted include controlled grazing, fire and fertilizing.

Soil Wastage Outstanding Accomplishment

The combating of soil wastage is one of the outstanding accomplishments of the Civilian Conservation Corps during the past year, R. F. Fechner, CCC director, declared in a message made public today by the erudite Ward T. Darnell of Walton camp.

"Rich agricultural lands threatened with the loss of topsoil by erosion were protected during the year through the work of the CCC," Fechner said. The camp personnel demonstrated modern methods of soil saving, and in so doing accomplished a large volume of work.

"The spreading of soil erosion to the U. S. Department of Agriculture is a favorable factor in the comprehensive flood control program. Experts agree that erosion can be materially lessened by erosion within headwater watersheds, and in so doing controlled a large volume of water."

Fechner also said that the CCC not only has the highest and cooperative efforts of the men who were engaged in flood relief work during the disaster. River floods in the spring of 1937, Camp Walton, which is operated by the Soil Conservation Service, U. S. Department of Agriculture, has been located at Walton, August, 1935.

Improved Pastures Doing Double Duty

Improved pastures, are doing double duty on farms of cooperation in the Soil Conservation Service near Walton by helping to control erosion as well as providing food for livestock, according to Fechner, agronomist of CCC at Walton.

Pasture improvement plans in this area this spring will include fertilization, liming where its need is dictated, controlled grazing, and seeding.

Called areas in old pastures are being converted to new pastures will be fertilized, seeded, mulched with waste material, as straw, damaged hay, crop residues, or brush.

Much provides protection for young seedlings against overgrazing and high surface temperatures. Redman explained. CCC much such as brush also is used to protect the seedlings. Observations show that little soil is obtained where mulch is used without fertilizer, however. Redman recommends that grass of new pastures be deferred three to five inches in the spring and late fall. In the spring and late fall, insufficient growth rather than the seedlings which is desirable in pastures. Erate grazing will produce a balanced sod of grasses and legumes in the mixture.

Albert Parker Sold On Strip Cropping

Albert Parker, Boone county farmer who is sold on strip cropping as a means of conserving soil and moisture on eroding hills, according to Ward T. Darnell, erudite of the Walton camp.

Parker has replanned his farm include 104 acres of contour tillage of which 87 acres will be farmed in strips. He has also lengthened rotation to four years, including years of meadow. Other soil conservation practices he has adopted include controlled grazing, fire and fertilizing.

Farming Must Adopt Conservation To Survive

Says Stuart Chase In Message To Ward T. Darnell

With Frontiers closed to further agricultural exploitation, American farming must adopt a pattern of conservation to survive.

Thus did Stuart Chase, noted economist, paint a picture of the new tillage methods farmers are practicing to end the critical problem of soil erosion, which is confronting Kentucky. His message to Ward T. Darnell, superintendent of the Walton CCC camp, urged community cooperation against wastage of soil and water resources.

"A changing pattern of agriculture is in order," Chase wrote. "Farming styles must change from straight lines to curves on sloping land, or we will lose the scant remainder of the thin layer of topsoil which remains between productivity and exhaustion."

The economist, author of recent books on conservation of natural resources, likened a cellar door to a sloping field.

"Pour water over a cellar door and what happens?" he asked. "The water runs off immediately. But place a carpet over the door, and then pour the water. The carpet must be saturated before the water can escape."

Chase compared the carpet to the vegetative cover of forest litter or grasses which originally covered most of Kentucky. This cover, he said, not only holds back the rainfall as a sponge, but keeps the soil in a receptive condition to allow percolation of water into the ground.

In his travels over the country, the author observes that the conservation pattern is spreading slowly yet surely. It grows out in all directions from federal soil conservation areas and by efforts of individual farmers, picking up new converts, and gathering momentum as a rolling snowball gathers size.

"Essentially the conservation of soil resources must be a community proposition," Chase believes. "Ultimately it must depend for its success on the farmers themselves. It is no something government can give to the farmer. He must take the best erosion-control methods tested by agricultural and soil conservation stations—and adapt them to the peculiar conditions of his own farm."

"This farmer must do to prevent eventual decline of American farm life. But he cannot do the job alone. His efforts must be united with those of his neighbors, for soil erosion does not recognize farm nor county nor state boundaries."

Chase was impressed by a recent survey of the spread of soil-saving practices in Ohio which showed that farmers are adopting the new conservation pattern. The survey disclosed that farmers in at least 46 counties have strip-cropped their fields, as compared to only 5 counties in 1934. The contour stripe, he said, not only create an artistic design, but also invite raindrops to linger until absorbed by the soil.

Safety In Field And Camp Stressed

Safety in the field and in camp is stressed continually by the supervisory personnel of Camp Walton according to Superintendent Ward T. Darnell. Systematic lessons in safety are given enrollees each week under the direction of a committee established for that purpose. Only one lost-time accident, a sprained arm by Enrollee Harold Bailey, occurred during the last month.

Darnell Wonders If It Will Rain April 2nd

Superintendent Ward T. Darnell of the Walton CCC camp is wondering whether it will rain on April 2.

If it does rain, he fears that attendance at the open house sponsored by the camp will suffer. But on the other hand, if it rains, he will have a striking example of soil erosion to show the group which will tour representative farms in the area.

Two small rivulets run together in a roadside ditch dividing two farms in Boone county. Following even slight rains, the flow draining from cultivated fields and eroded pastures is muddy, carrying topsoil washed from those fields.

The second rivulet carries run-off from a wooded woodland, and it is clear and free of silt. The junction of the two streams, Darnell says, provides an excellent exhibit of the value of a protective cover for sloping land. So, in a way, he hopes it will rain on April 2.

Boy Scouts To Study Conservation, Etc.

When Boy Scouts from Covington and other troops in the Northern Kentucky Council pitch their tents at Camp Hill this summer, new projects in soil conservation, reforestation, and woods improvement will be included.

These topics are the result of demonstrations carried out by the Walton CCC camp on the 50-acre Boy Scout tract near Morning View. Enrollees recently completed a 3-acre demonstration of woods improvement, in which crooked and diseased trees were removed to encourage better growth of the remaining stand. The area will be replanted this spring with white oak, poplar, and ash.

Guided by this demonstration, this summer scouts will continue the woods improvement project, on a balance of the wooded portion of the camp. Trees that are removed will be used for fuel.

The Walton Camp has also constructed temporary dams in a small gullied area which will be planted with black locust and walnut. CCC foresters have given a series of lectures to the scouts on care and improvement of woodlands.

Half of Members From Covington and Vicinity

A check of the records in the headquarters of Company 3541, Walton, Ky., indicate that one-half of the 160 members of the company are residents of Covington and vicinity.

In order that the families of these members may have an opportunity to learn how Camp life is conducted open house has been declared on April 2, 1938, Fifth Anniversary of the CCC. The Commanding Officer, Lieut. Bennett L. Jackson, and Camp Superintendent, Mr. Ward T. Darnell, will welcome these families and other visitors at this time.

Vacancies In Corps To Be Filled In April

Director Robert Fechner pointed out that 170,000 applicants for places in the CCC during April enrollment will have to be turned down. He said that 225,000 men applied for 58,000 vacancies in the Corps.

The Director recommended that the CCC be made a permanent organization of the Federal Government and that its size be flexible with the needs of young men for employment.

Concerning permanency of the Corps, he said: "The past record of the CCC and the present and future needs of young men and the natural resources of the United States makes it wise to extend this activity as a permanent part of our government. This opinion, as you are aware, has been stated by the President. The immediate effect of permanency of the CCC organization would be to improve the morale of the entire supervisory force and to permit further economies which would be possible to a permanent organization, but which are not likely to be effected by an organization with a definite time limit set for its death, as at present the case with the CCC."

Miscellaneous Notes—

On your visit to the Walton CCC Camp, you will find that the camp infirmary is one of the cleanest, brightest spots in camp. Rigid Army inspections are made and high standards are maintained.

Dr. Francis E. Bedinger, of Walton, Kentucky, is the Camp Surgeon. In the infirmary is an attendant and one assistant. One man is on duty at all hours.

You can't spend money there, but when you come to the CCC Camp at Walton, be sure to visit the Camp Exchange. The exchange is the Camp's "Trading Post." All personal necessities, as well as candy, soft drinks, and ice cream are sold. No sales are made to civilians.

Lessons In Soil Conservation Offered Enrollees

Practical lessons in soil conservation are offered to all interested enrollees at the Walton CCC camp, a factor that will enable many of them to adopt erosion control measures when they return to farm homes according to Ray Trautman, educational director.

A general course in soil conservation and a more detailed course in engineering are now being given to two groups, Trautman said. More than 50 enrollees are taking the general course, and this number will be increased materially when camp replacements are filled next month. A course in soils as they affect erosion control was recently completed. Instruction in surveying, mechanics, clerical work, is also being offered by members of the technical staff. These courses are taught by D. B. Redman, agronomist; W. K. Williams, engineer; J.ohn L. Allen, Thomas C. Mason, and J. S. Sizemore, foremen.

There are counties in the United States in which 70,000 to 80,000 acres of agricultural land have been eroded beyond reclamation.

TO: Our Friends in Walton and Vicinity.

It's a birthday party at the CCC Camp at Walton, Kentucky.

The occasion is the fifth anniversary of the Civilian Conservation Corps and the date is April 2, 1938.

Because we want you to become better acquainted with our camp life and work projects, and because we want to become better acquainted with you and the community in which we live and work, the Commanding Officer, and Mr. Ward T. Darnell, Camp Superintendent, join in extending this invitation for you, a representative business man in the community, to visit us on that date. This invitation is extended on behalf of all the members of this company and in the same fine spirit of cooperation that has been the keynote of the CCC since its inception.

It is hoped that you will be able to visit us. Will you drop us a note now so we will know if we can expect you.

Very truly yours,

BENNETT L. JACKSON,

1st Lt. Inf.-Res., 400th Inf.,

Commanding.

The Commanding Officer, 1st Lieut. Bennett L. Jackson, Inf.-Res., 400th Infantry.

It takes more than a few strands of barbed wire stretched around a worn-out field to make a pasture.

Careful planning is necessary in establishing new pastures on eroded land. Good soil controls erosion and provides an almost immediate return in low cost feed.

January Floods Reveal Strength of Red Cross

Aid Given 1,032,000 Persons Through Set-Up By Agency

At the height of the emergency Red Cross relief offices were established in 182 inundated counties and in 146 counties where refugees were cared for, the report stated. Eight regional headquarters offices controlled the 325 county offices, and were in turn supervised by the National Red Cross in Washington, D. C.

A statistical summary of persons aided by the organization indicates that the floods constituted the greatest peace-time emergency ever faced by the nation. The Red Cross gave some form of assistance to 1,032,000 men, women and children. From January to August hundreds of thousands of trained workers helped by thousands of volunteers administered to the sufferers.

A Red Cross fleet of 5100 boats was organized, according to the report. Emergency hospitals established totalled 300 and 3000 nurses were assigned to flood duty. In more than 1,000 refugee centers the victims of the flood were sheltered, clothed and fed. Through the Red Cross medical-health program and the work of public health agencies sickness was kept to normal for the time of year in all inundated areas.

Because of his disaster experience the Red Cross was directed by the President of the United States, who is also president of the Red Cross, to coordinate the effort of all federal food relief agencies, the government and Red Cross officials met daily at the Red Cross headquarters building in Washington to plan relief measures and prevent duplication of effort.

"We were fortunate in having 56 years of disaster relief experience to call upon in meeting the emergency," Admiral Cary T. Grayson, chairman of the Red Cross, said.

It was found that 97,000 families out of 45,000 people who had to have their resources supplemented or an entirely new start provided by the Red Cross, the report stated. Red Cross emergency and rehabilitation assistance was as follows: rescue, transportation and shelter for 62,000 families; food, clothing and other maintenance for 193,000 families; housing and repair for 72,000 families; household goods for 90,000 families; medical, nursing and sanitation help for 15,000 families; agricultural rehabilitation for 10,000 families; occupational aid for 3,000 families and other types of relief for 4,000 families.

"Credit for this largest peace-time relief operation in the history of the nation goes to the American people who contributed a Red Cross relief fund of more than $25,000,000," Admiral Grayson said.

During the year the Red Cross gave aid to the victims of 105 other disasters in 26 states, Alaska and the District of Columbia. The Red Cross financed the majority of these relief operations from money contributed through the Red Cross chapters during the annual Roll Call last November, since it is only in case of large scale disasters that a national drive for relief funds is made.

This year the Roll Call is from November 11th to the 25th. The Red Cross seeks a greater membership to meet its disaster relief and other service obligations during 1938.

Last year Red Cross chapters gave vital help to 120,000 needy families.

Red Cross Replaces Farm Family Losses

The Red Cross gave agricultural rehabilitation to 16,116 farm families following the recent eastern floods of last winter. Types of aid included feed, seed, livestock, farm tools and machinery and other items essential to agricultural productivity. More than $599,000 was expended by the organization to meet these requirements.

In addition to the financial assistance, rural families hard hit by the flood waters were rescued, clothed, fed and sheltered by the Red Cross. Where it was necessary the Red Cross repaired and rebuilt out-buildings, barns and other structures. Medical and nursing care were provided and homes refurbished.

Red Cross agricultural rehabilitation benefited nearly three times as many families as received all other types of Red Cross occupational rehabilitation combined.

Last year the Red Cross introduced an accident check list to 7,000,000 American homes. The list told how hazards in the home might be eliminated and the work of inspection was done by householders themselves. A like program of home safety prevention is being conducted this year.

SPARTA GALLATIN COUNTY

The entire community was shocked when it was learned of the passing of one of its most lovable characters, Ralph Barker Gordon. Death came in the stillness and solitude of the night and conveyed the open-blossom there in the springtime of life. The golden clouds rested sweetly and inviting upon the golden gates and the light of heaven shined down through the gathering mist of death and an angel of light was unfolded to him in the quick consciousness of a soul redeemed.

Born April 14, 1921, son of Roy and Clara (Craig) Gordon. He leaves to mourn the loss his parents; a grandfather; two brothers, Kenneth and Ray and one sister, Elsie. Ralph was a freshman in Gallatin County Consolidated high school and was a favorite with both teachers and class-mates, possessing a kind sympathetic spirit, generous and benevolent. He carried good cheer with him, wherever he went. He who loves goodness harbors angels, and lives with God. Such was the life of this youth, who the entire community mourns as their own, had lived. The funeral was conducted from Sparta Christian Church, where he was a consistent member, conducted by Rev. W. J. Clarke, where an overflowing house had gathered to pay the last tribute of respect to this splendid young man. The floral offerings were many and beautiful. Eight flower girl class-mates carried flowers, while boys of his class served as pallbearers.

The remains were laid to rest in New Liberty cemetery by Carlton and son.

Andes Wax Palms
Would Flourish in West Coast Climate

Washington.—Wax palms, that now wave their 200-foot tops above the 10,000-foot Andes, may presently grace the parks of Pacific coast cities from San Diego to Grays Harbor, Wash.

Similarity in climate between the South American highland and the North American coast strip offers this possibility, says Dr. Miriam L. Bonhard, botanist of the United States forest service, in the annual report of the Smithsonian Institution.

Among Tallest of Trees.

These palms, as Dr. Bonhard describes them, are among the most remarkable trees in the world. They are easily the tallest of all palms, their slender stalks rising 200 feet or more into the air. When first discovered they were the tallest trees known. They grow in the high Andes of northwestern South America, from Venezuela to southern Peru. The altitude of their habitat is never less than 4,000 feet and rises to 10,000 feet at Quindio pass in Colombia, and to 15,000 feet on the Colombia-Ecuador border. It is cold country, within sight of perpetual snows on the lofty Andean peaks; but not at all the kind of habitat commonly envisioned for palms. Some of the species regularly endure temperatures below freezing.

Reason for the Name.

The tree is known as the wax palm because the trunk is covered with a coating of wax, which travelers have described as giving it the appearance of a towering pillar of alabaster. Natives scrape this off and use it for candles and matches. It turns with a clean white flame.

There are several distinct species of wax palms, one of them bearing the name Bescherovitzia in honor of the great German composer. Each species has its own peculiar range of altitude and climate preferences.

Deed Adds a Thousand Years to Age of Dura

New Haven, Conn.—Surprised Americans, digging in Mesopotamia, have unearthed a real estate deed 3,500 years old that adds over a thousand years to the age of the famous ancient city, Dura-on-the-Euphrates.

The deed inscribed on clay has been brought here by Yale University by Frank E. Brown, archeologist of the Yale expedition exploring Dura's buried ruins.

The real estate deed reveals that Dura was not founded by Alexander the Great, as a desert outpost of his empire, about 280 B. C., which historians have taken for granted. Instead, the city was flourishing 17 or 18 hundred years before Christ, in an era so little known that modern scholars call it a dark age of Mesopotamia's civilization.

Archaeologists found the clay tablet embedded in a temple wall of much later date. Deciphering it, they realized it describes a real estate transaction regarding a field in the city of Damara, which by its described locality and its spelling was apparently the same as Dura.

Prof. F. J. Stephens, curator of Yale's Babylonian collection, points out that the ancient deed was witnessed by important people, such as officials, judges, and priests.

"We may say," he explained, "that our document was a deed whereby the king conferred the piece of property described upon one of his nobles."

The tablet dates from the reign of a king Hammurabi of Babel, who lived several centuries later than famous King Hammurabi of Babylon. Babel is a mysterious kingdom, whose capital lay near Dura, within the 2,000 years of "dark ages" between early Babylonia and the Greek and Roman eras, a gap which archeologists are now beginning to fill with ancient history.

Peter Pan Among Insects
Discovered in Florida

Gainesville, Fla.—A "Peter Pan" among insects, a species that never grows up, has been discovered in a ravine in northwestern Florida by Prof. Theodore H. Hubbell of the University of Florida here.

The curious creature is a grouse locust that remains in its nymphal, or immature, form all its life, never producing wings like the rest of its kindred. It matures only sexually, so that the species may be perpetuated.

The nearest relatives of the new species are found in Central America; but they are ordinary, normally winged insects.

Chafing under problems they could not control so long as they were a part of Virginia the Kentuckians began in 1780 to agitate the idea of separation from the mother state and sent a petition to Congress asking the right to enact their own laws, govern themselves and be responsible only to the Federal Government. This premature but since the seaboard states had set the example by separating from England, the separatist movement became popular and was precipitated in Kentucky by a threatened invasion of Cherokee Indians.

Benjamin Logan, County Lieutenant of the District of Kentucky, had to depend upon volunteer troops to repel such invasions, having no authority to raise an army without consent of Virginia. As that government was hundreds of miles away the Indians could swoop down upon the defenseless settlers, destroy their unites. Judge Samuel McDowell, the judge of the court, was chosen president of the convention.

The most pressing matter before the Convention was that of military protection against marauding Indians. The members were unanimous in favor of separation, but believing they had no right to formulate plans for statehood, they passed several resolutions relating their grievances to the United States. A resolution was adopted asking that a Second Convention be called for the following May to consider the formation of a new state. The delegates were elected by the people themselves, according to population.

The Second Convention, convened May 23, 1785 and passed five resolutions: 1st, that the assembly be petitioned to establish the District into a separate state; 2nd, that the District be received into the American Union; 3rd, that a third convention be called in August to take further under consideration the state of the District; 4th, that the Third Convention continue until April next; and 5th, that all the above resolutions and addresses be referred to the future Convention. This caution was to ascertain whether or not public opinion was unanimous in favor of separation.

The Third Convention met August 8, 1785. Among the new members was James Wilkinson, who was an agitator. He prepared an address to Virginia, which was demanding that Kentucky's petition be officially before the Virginia Legislature and Virginia granted permission for separation but laid down certain conditions. Fearing Kentucky might not enter the Union, there he called a Fourth Convention for August 1786. The boundary of the new state was to remain the same as that of the District. Kentucky was to assume her part of the Virginia public debt; landholdings based on Virginia laws were to be maintained; the Ohio river was to be open and free to all citizens of the United States; finally if the Convention decided on separation, it should fix a date prior to Sept. 1787 when Virginia's authority should cease. This last proviso was due to the fact that no mention of joining the Union was included in this Wilkinson-written address.

When the Fourth Convention met Sept. 1786, an atmosphere of irritation prevailed. Logan and Clark were leading volunteers against the Indians and members of the Convention were on the expeditions. A minority had no power to act. They appointed John Marshall as their agent in Richmond and a new enabling act was asked. An election was called for August, 1787, for a Fifth Convention and an extension of time was given for the termination of Virginia's authority.

The Fifth Convention met Sept. 1787 and found the people in a state of confusion. Wilkinson and his coterie had stirred up trouble over the reputed plan of John Jay to barter the navigation of the Mississippi River to Spain. At this crisis John Breckinridge reached the ear of Congress, the Kentucky Gazette came off the press, laying bare the designs of Spain, and the Convention decided unanimously for separation on Virginia terms.

Before the Sixth Convention assembled July 28, 1788, General Wilkinson made a demonstration of the advantages to be gained by cooperation with Spain rather than with the Federal Government. With a flotilla of 25 boats manned by 150 armed seamen he conducted a lucrative commerce with New Orleans through a special permit from Miro. To make his prosperity the more spectacular he returned to Lexington driving in a coach and four attended by a retinue of slaves. The conspiracy of Spain came into the open. Congress refused Kentucky admission into the Union. Baffled and disappointed, Kentucky nevertheless turned a deaf ear to Wilkinson and adjourned calling a new Convention for Nov. 1788.

The Seventh Convention was marked by foreign intrigue. Wilkinson leading the Court Party, decided independence. Reenter Brooke and Thomas Marshall led the Country Party which was Conservative. When the matter had reached white heat George Murrill wrote an article in the Kentucky Gazette which had the effect of an exploding bomb, for he awakened the Kentuckians to the danger ahead if the plans of Wilkinson prevailed. He urged the convention to "seek another enabling act from Virginia, and permission from Congress to enter the Union." As a result a resolution was sent to Virginia asking in simple terms that she provide for Kentucky's separation and use her influence with Congress to get her admitted into the Union.

The Eighth Convention of July 9, 1789 was similar to the others, except that Kentucky asked Virginia to make the terms easier. She complied, and the Ninth Convention of July 25, 1790 adopted the terms and thanked Virginia for her kindness and good will. Another address was sent to Congress asking to be taken into the Union, which was done February 4th, 1791.

From the Elephant's Back

By MARY M. BUDD
© McClure Newspaper Syndicate, WDU Service.

THERE was a circus in town. In spite of his twenty-five years Adam Ashmond felt all the thrills of a boy of ten as he swung briskly down the street toward the circus grounds that June evening. From the distance was wafted the blare of a brass band.

"Hi, there, Adam," called a clear young voice. "Are you going to the circus?"

Adam came to a sharp halt, and lifted his hat as Sally Christy joined him.

"Sure," he said, smiling at her eager face. "I wouldn't miss it for anything. I'm just keen on a circus as when I was a youngster. I enjoy the whole outfit."

"So do I," declared Sally gayly. "It's my secret ambition to be a bareback rider. Put me under the big top, with the band going, and the horses kicking up the sawdust—gosh, it's great!"

"Sally," remonstrated Adam, with pretended severity. "You must not say 'gosh.' It is a vulgar word for a young lady to use. The circus has demoralized you. Go home, and to bed, my child."

"How about your lordship?" mocked Sally. "Has your mamma given you permission to go alone to the circus?"

"I'm not going alone, Miss Impertinence. I shall be under the protection of Miss Daisy Twining."

Sally's bright eyes clouded. "O-h," she murmured, soberly, and the rallery of her manner dropped. "Well, I'm going alone and must hurry on."

Adam watched her disappear. It would have been fun to go to the circus with Sally, he thought, with a twinge of regret. There had been a time, before the advent of Miss Daisy Twining, when Sally had had a place in his thoughts and attentions. But Daisy, with her fair loveliness, had, as Adam put it, been a knockout. Sally he had known all his life. Daisy, who was a summer boarder at the hotel, had the added attraction of being a novelty.

He admired her dainty, fastidious ways, and the perfection of her grooming.

He felt he was highly favored when he persuaded her to go to the circus with him. She said frankly that she disliked a circus, and proved this attitude on reaching the grounds.

Adam did his best to make her enter into the spirit of things, but his best was not a success. When she murmured that she was too warm he rushed out of the tent to buy a supply of palm leaf fans.

After getting them he was hurrying back to the tent when he saw that the grand ensemble was forming for the opening parade.

At the head of the procession stood a huge elephant, which circled around it. In his boyhood days he had been curious to know how the world looked from an elephant's back. Here was his chance to find out.

He explained his desire to the attendant, who urged on by a gentleman, helped Adam mount his lofty perch. Once there he seemed to have reached a giddy height and was peering cautiously downward when, from somewhere, changed a bell. Instinct with the heave and a shudder of flesh, the elephant marched ponderously forward. Adam made an ineffectual effort to scramble down.

"Sit still," shouted the attendant. "You are all right."

To his dismay Adam was carried through the open rap of the main tent. He was conscious of a burst of music, a glare of light and the faces of the spectators spinning before his eyes like so many cream-colored tops. Then he got a grip on himself.

This was a unique situation and he would make the most of it. He began to bow and wave his fans. As he had been born and brought up in the town, nearly everyone in the audience knew him, and his entrance on the elephant's back was greeted with laughter and applause. It was just fun until the elephant lumbered past the particular spot where sat Miss Daisy Twining. In the act of making her a sweeping obeisance Adam caught the cold disdain of her eyes. He knew he had lost her, and his mind died under her frozen glance. Of course, she was quite right in her disapproval. What a fool he had been to make a clown of himself before her.

Adam shrunk back ashamed. Then again a clear voice challenged him and he saw Sally. She was standing up, her short hair tossed back from her vivid little face, and she was shouting at the top of her lungs:

"Atta boy! Atta boy! Atta boy!" Adam straightened himself with restored self-esteem. He always said afterwards that he got a correct perspective of life from that ride on the elephant's back, and that when he slid down to earth again he knew that he loved Sally.

Habits of the Bee Family
Although drones are the fathers of queens and worker bees, they themselves, have no male parents strange as it may seem. Drones hatch from unfertilized eggs laid by the queen. When the queen's body is full of sperm which fertilize eggs from which females hatch are contained in a sac. When the queen desires to lay a drone egg, she simply does not release the sperm and hence the drone eggs are unfertilized. Strangely, too, worker bees which are undeveloped females—can, in the absence of a queen, lay drone eggs but have no way to fertilize eggs so as to bring forth queens or workers.

Nature didn't plan for this Stray on your eyes!

By day your ancestor's eyes were tested by woodland greenery, at night by darkness. There was no reading of fine print nor close, eye-fatiguing work... no flickering movies and speeding autos to whirl thousands of images before delicate eyes constantly... no artificial light and glare. Today all these things are putting on your eyes a tax Nature never intended.

No wonder then that, of every five people, the eyes of one are subjected to severe eyestrain. If there is one thing you should never guess about it is your eye condition. All the light and sight of your life come through your eyes. Your work and play—EVERYTHING depends upon them.

Recreation and Athletics

These play an important role in the molding of the character of the young men in the Civilian Conservation Corps. Without recreation the steady and sometimes dull routine of work would tend to lower the morale of the young men. But this, the important plan of athletics and recreational program was inaugurated, which gives the boys something to look forward to at the close of the day. Remember the old saying: "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy." We are striving to uphold this lesson by offering to the members of the CCC an extensive recreational and athletic program. Transportation is made available for any group of boys desiring to visit nearby towns, camps, swimming pools, and any other approved places of recreation. In the athletic program, all forms of athletics are offered in their respective seasons. The following are a few of the major games offered: Baseball, softball, volleyball, tennis, basketball, horseshoes, football, and many other minor games too numerous to mention. Table tennis, checkers, Monday morning coach dominos, cards, and pool are available at all times at the camp recreation hall. The enrollees are encouraged to offer suggestions for any new games and new recreational places, and, after giving the suggestions careful consideration, they are carried out.

After careful thought, I can truthfully say: "The CCC Camp is one of the best places for any jobless young man to spend his time."

Parent-Faculty Basketball Games

Attracts Large Crowd Friday Night— Results Divided

The basketball games staged at the Walton gym., last Friday night between the faculty of the Walton and Verona schools and P. T. A. members were attended by a large crowd and quite a nice sum was realized by the local Parent-Teachers' organization.

The boys and girls of yesterday did themselves proud, and though probably not as fast as a few years ago, a number of them can still

The Mammies and lady faculty members were first to tangle, and this tussle was taken by the Mammies, 15 to 10. The game was close as the score indicates, but the Mammies showed the greater skill and led throughout most of the game.

The ladies, who participated in this classed event and the number of points scored were: Faculty—Mrs. Robert Gordon 4; Miss Edith

Mammies—Mrs. Matthew Flynn. 7; Mrs. Wallace Grubbs; 6; Mrs. C. D. Benson; 2; Mrs. Clifford Pruett. Mrs. F. E. Bedinger; Mrs. Charles Rouse; Mrs. D. L. Maddox; Mrs. Charles

A. Thorton; Mrs. Bennett Jackson; Mrs. Roland Glenn and Mrs. Nell Campbell.

In the second game, the Pappies did not fare so well, and were taken into camp by the faculty men, 20 to 16.

This was really a hotly contested battle, and it was not until the final minutes of play that the faculty forged ahead to win the game. Had it not been for Glenn James,

The players and points registered are: Faculty—Glenn Laws, 16; Mr. Chipman, 4; Hubert Baker; Homer Osborne; W. F. Coop; Wallace Grubbs.

Papples—Clifford Powers, 2; J. B. Johnson, 6; Kenneth Johnson, 11.

Most of the participants were dressed in natty (that's not quite the word, but we'll use it anyway) uniforms, and a number of the P. T. A. were costumed, which added greatly to the evening's merriment. The type of ball played was not of the 38 variety, but the games were very interesting, as well as amusing.

and are popular with the fans. It might not do any harm to have more of such contests.

King Arthur and His Knights Modern critics are inclined to doubt the ancient tale about King Arthur and his knights, but in Tintagel, England, the Arthurian legend is so strong that a stone memorial hall has been erected in honor of the monarch who is said to have led the Christian kings of Britain against the Saxons of Kent in the Sixth century.

Her entire population at the time of statehood including slaves numbered 72,000 souls. Many homes boasted libraries, fine china and even splinters brought from Philadelphia. The people still traveled on foot and on horseback, except the favored few who rode in gigs—those quaint two-wheeled vehicles which by some miracle were able to keep their equilibrium over the roots and stumps not yet cleared from the lands.

The Convention which drafted the Constitution also provided for the election of the first Governor, Isaac Shelby, and the first legislature in Kentucky which was to meet in Lexington, June 4, 1792.

Lexington at that time was a flourishing frontier city with schools and churches, a few stone and brick houses, called mansions, a stone court house, seven or eight good streets along which log walks or flagstones had been laid for pedestrians, three taverns, The Buffalo kept by John McNair, the Indian Queen, kept by Benjamin Kiser, and The Sheaf of Wheat, kept by Robert

By Mrs. W. T. Lafferty

University of Kentucky, Lexington

XXI—Kentucky Becomes a State When Virginia granted Kentucky the right of separation she set April 1792 as the date for a convention at which a Constitution should be formed, and within a month the Constitution of Kentucky was drafted and adopted.

With characteristic independence the Kentuckians formed it to fit their own needs yet as nearly like the Constitution of Virginia as possible. Credit for the instrument is due chiefly to George Nicholas who had already played a prominent part in the Virginia Convention which had ratified the Federal Constitution.

Kentucky became a state in June 1792. Her vast domain was embraced by the patent of King James in the Virginia Company and according to the survey of Colonel William Preston. It was known as West Pinecastle County, Virginia.

In 1780, Kentucky County, Virginia was divided into three counties: Lincoln, Jefferson, and Fayette, and called the District of Kentucky.

The names of the states which the three counties had been subdivided into nine; Bourbon, Fayette, Jefferson, Lincoln, Madison, Mason, Nelson, and Woodford. At present there are one hundred and twenty counties, and their multiplicity requires large sums for maintenance which could be more wisely spent.

Kentucky has been unique in every phase of her history. She was the first native born state in the union and the first to draft her own constitution from beginning to end.

The original third had only to make minor alterations in their colonial charters. She was the first state to grant representation on the basis of numbers; the first to grant suffrage regardless of religious belief and property qualifications. She was the only state beset to any extent with foreign conspiracies, and was the first to ask admission into the Union.

When that honor was conferred upon Vermont, she became the fifteenth state and blazed the trail for the Western states to follow.

There was no woman in the first assembly, but a minute in the old Trustees Book shows the order for converting the old Market House into a State House and Mrs. Wood was paid $15 for cleaning and repairing it for the accommodation of the General Assembly.

After Governor Shelby had rested from his long ride from Danville to Lexington, he took the oath of office and on the sixth of June, he addressed the legislature in person.

No rent was paid for this humble house, and the incidental expense account was modest. Twelve shillings were paid for a ballot box, two shillings and sixpence to the person who raised the pole and flag; four pounds for making a writing table and press for the use of the clerk of the House of Representatives and two pounds seven shillings to the sergeant-at-arms for repairs. The State Treasurer had to give bond, though he had a very small sum of money to care for.

No rent was paid for this humble house, and the incidental expense account was modest. Twelve shillings were paid for a ballot box, two shillings and sixpence to the person who raised the pole and flag; four pounds for making a writing table and press for the use of the clerk of the House of Representatives and two pounds seven shillings to the sergeant-at-arms for repairs. The State Treasurer had to give bond, though he had a very small sum of money to care for.

OLD MILL POND

Each spring there seems to come a time when the thoughts of days that used to be. Those memories still hold fond. As I see myself by the old MILL POND. A place I wandered round when young. With pole and bent pin tackle flung To lure the mud cats from their home. While overhead the cobalt dome Of Heaven arched to kiss the hills. On how it all sends happy thrills Just chasing up and down my spine There with my homemade hook, pole and line. And now thru all the stretch of years.

Thru all the joys, the hopes, the tears,

Thru all the years those memories are fond. In dreams I see ripples on the OLD MILL POND.

Fingers for Forks

The old rule that fingers were made before forks holds good in Morocco. Soups and stews there are dipped up with bread and chicken and meats are torn apart with the fingers. A meal at the palace of a Moorish pasha may consist of as many as 12 courses, mostly of fowl and lamb. Pigeon may be served in a very light pastry, chicken in a thick stew, or with stuffing. Double pancakes with a little honey inside them, vermicelli and lamb served in a variety of ways make up the rest of the meal, which may be topped off with tea.

AT LAST Mary Ladd's long hoped-for day has come. Before her was a letter from the nation of the Shelters Arms home. She had just the sort of little girl that Mrs. Gray had been looking for, a lot of three with yellow curls that shone like gold in the sunlight and a disposition like a May morning.

Mary Ladd went about her duties with a song on her lips. She had waited so long that it seemed as though she could not endure the brief wait until noon when Jim would come to drive her to the home.

Thirteen years it was now since she had held a soft, warm little body to her heart. Now she had nothing left but two little cold white crosses in Mt. Auburn, and memories still poignant to the influence of other mothers' happiness.

She went down stairs to prepare a light lunch. Jim would be so glad, and just as excited as she was. He had been such an adored and adorable daddy.

He came home at noon, just as the clock struck a tall, lean and slightly stooping man whose hair was fast tingling gray at the temples. When he read the letter the tiny crinkles that always appeared about his mouth and the corners of his eyes, when he was pleased about anything, satisfied Mary that he was quite content that it was to be a girl after all.

"Let's not wait for lunch," said he. "Why not go now and take the baby back home for lunch? A cup of tea will do me until we get back."

He drank his tea while Mary got ready. Then they drove off.

"It's nearly dinner time," the matron told them, as she welcomed them in.

"But I will take you up to my room," she said. "Perhaps you would like to see them all together."

So she led the way up the broad, polished stair to a great room, on the second floor, a room of sunshine and flowers, of filled white curtains and potted plants, of dolls and colored paper butterflies in the air.

"Two teachers were busy with the children. It was not hard to pick out Baby Ruth from the rest for her long yellow curls gleamed in the sunlight of the big room."

"This is your new mother, dear," said the matron, laying her hand on the child's head for an instant, "and this is your daddy. Say how do you do."

"How do you do?" returned the child obediently, dropping a little curtsey.

"We teach them all that," explained the matron. "You won't have any trouble at all with her. She is a sweet child, and both her parents are dead."

"Ruth crept like a shy bird into Mary's arms; but Mary's attention had been diverted to a tiny crib at her side, where lay an infant whose eyes reminded her of the eyes of the four motherless dolls at home, fixed and staring and blue."

The baby face was pinched and we-schlike. Mary leaned over the crib. The blue eyes stared back into her own with such intensity that she gathered the little creature into her arms.

"I don't know what to do with that mite," said the matron, almost apologetically. "We don't generally keep our children long. We like to put them into foster homes. But nobody wants this one. He was abandoned four months ago, when he was about a week old. He is healthy enough, has had all the tests, but he just doesn't thrive. I had him put in here this morning because it was so sunny."

"Poor little man," breathed Mary, her lips brushing his cheek. "Poor little man that nobody wants." The baby's skinny, blue-veined hands fluttered to Mary's cheek, and something like a smile passed over his face. Mary held him closer.

"I want him," she announced. "I want him quite as much as I want the little girl. I can make a man of him."

"It's a lot of work," protested her husband; "more work than you have been used to for some time."

"Bother the work," she cried hotly. "Why, Jim, just think, nobody wants him, my poor little son! You wanted a boy, Jim. We can have both—our son and our daughter. The little tin soldiers are waiting for him."

"Ruth," she called to the owner of the yellow curls, "come here to mother. Don't you want him for your little brother?"

The yellow curls bobbed an emphatic affirmative against Mary's knee.

Daddy Ladd twined a curl around his finger.

"All right," he said, "if Ruth wants a brother, she shall have him."

"The tin soldiers need a general, and Ruth needs somebody to pull those yellow curls."

So the yellow curls bobbed an emphatic affirmative against Mary's knee.

(Delayed from last week)

The writer is very sorry to hear that George Courtney, Uncle Bill Hendrix and Mrs. Clara Webster are seriously ill.

Alva Hon purchased a truck load of corn from the Far South, probably a few of this generation know her as she used to be. The modern colored maid sometimes takes her place in some ways, but she is not Mammy.

Mammy felt herself a part of the family, after the Civil War as well as before. Her young charges were reared according to the traditions of the Big House and also according to Mammy's own rigid ideas of what was right and wrong. She never thought that white and black children should be reared alike; black was black and white was white.

The only compromise between the two was "pore white trash." Somehow Mammy seems to have always been plump, with beaming face and white teeth. Her voice was one of her most valuable characteristics: she could be heard, and she knew it. Her frankness and freedom of speech resembled those of an ancient Greek philosopher. Many of time remarks must have cut deeply, but it would have violated a tradition to condemn her for frankness. She knew quality when she saw it and tried to enforce an appreciation of quality on her charges. Mammy herself was known among her own people for the quality of people she served rather than for any personal goodness. No real Mammy ever forgot the famous people she had raised and "nursed." Regardless of the actual value of her white folks, she could prove to all comers that her people were the best. Otherwise she would not have been their servant. No, huh!

Just how much authority Mammy had I do not know; it was probably considerably less than she pretended it was. Her big voice and her husky frame enforced more authority than she had. She was a creature of dignity, especially in the presence of the white folks or of her own race who were not so highly favored by being trusted with the white folks' children. She gave the appearance of knowing a great deal more than she would like to tell, a characteristic that was sure to impress her own race. Mammy was a great moralist in spite of her own shortcomings.

Sorry to hear of Vernon Courtney son of Temp Courtney being ill with scarlet fever.

Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Arrasmith and daughter were Sunday guests of Paul Carter and family.

Mrs. Bess Hill attended church at Glencoe, Sunday and was a dinner guest of Mildred Lyons.

TO RIDE THE RIVER WITH

WILLIAM MACLEOD RAINE

CHAPTER IV.—Talking over the smoking pipe, Ray is enigmatically telling the story of the night when he was shot at the foot of the bed. Gray arrives at Pat Sully's camp, he finds only a note. It reads: "Meanwhile, Jeff rides into Tall Holt and sends word to Sherman Howard to bring him here. He shows Howard a band with his picture, with the name of Clint Duke, wanted as the leader of a pair of outlaws and robbers. The rest of the band pulled on his boots and swiftly examined his revolver. That the weapon rested lightly in his holster so that there would be no hindrance to a quick draw he made sure. This did not mean trouble. Ray had probably come with a chip on his shoulder. Norris was a killer of the worst kind. On the other hand, Sherman Howard had the reputation of doing his fighting by proxy. He might have brought more merely as a defensive precaution. Jeff hoped, if they did not open up with a blast of guns, to talk them out of any thought of vengeance. It would not be easy now, not with Curly all but to rub him out.

In his throat there beat the pulse of excitement that always accompanied deadly danger. His fingers trembled. A knock on the door sounded. Gray's nervousness vanished instantly. He said, "Come in," his drawing voice cool as ice-water.

CHAPTER V.—

Their host maneuvered Norris to a rocking chair. Howard sat in a straight-backed one. Curly was seated at the foot of the bed. Gray stood in a shadowy corner farthest from the window. He was giving himself the best chance possible. Of the three visitors, Norris was probably the most dangerous gunman, and a rocking chair is not the most advantageous spot for swift and accurate shooting.

"A little crowded in here, gent," Gray said lightly. "Hope you don't mind sitting on the bed, Mr. Connor. I'm short of chairs."

"Suits me," Curly answered. Gray nodded, turned his attention to the big man. "I hated to trouble you to come here, Mr. Howard," he said apologetically, "but I have a busted leg that interferes with walking."

"I didn't mind coming. I wasn't busy," Howard's leaden opaque eyes never lifted from the stranger. "Just reached town and I thought I'd better see you," Gray mentioned.

Slumped in the chair, the gross weight of the man overflowing, Howard reminded Gray of a prize hog. Howard said nothing. He waited for the situation to develop. The man had a capacity for effective silence.

"Purring I might want to stay around Tall Holt awhile," Gray went on easily. "It's a free country," Howard's voice was suave.

For some folks," Norris added with an insolent laugh. Gray smiled. "My idea, too, Mr. Norris. I want to find out if I'm one of those folks."

"Last time I saw you that roan was foggin' it out town fast," Norris tumbled. "You looked like you had hurried business anywhere but here, Mr. Gray, if that's what you call yourself."

"I changed my mind," Gray said. "Why?" Howard asked bluntly. "Got a busted leg. Shot up the other day."

"In front of the Golden Nugget?" Norris inquired, suspicion in his cold gray eyes. "No. Out on the L C range."

"While you were gunning for Lee," Curly charged. "No."

"Meaning me?" asked Norris, his eyes blitted. "Meaning only that this has been talked over among you. Someone took a crack at Chiswick. Whoever it was, I could just see his figure in the alley, and I ripped loose at him."

"Why?" asked Howard. "Had you any chips in the game?" "I've asked myself why often enough since," Gray replied, shaking his head. "Damn me, why, Nary chup, Mr. Howard. But I had been eating supper with him as his guest, and I reckon my notion must have been to see he got a fair break."

"But that isn't your notion any longer, Mr. Gray?" Howard queried lightly. "I'm not drawing a pay-check to be his bodyguard," Gray drawled. "Is it straight goods what he says, Sherm?" Curly demanded.

"I reckon so, Curly. One of the boys got impatient and cut loose at Chiswick."

"I don't know who. I'm telling you only what I've heard."

"All right," Norris said. "This busted leg of his. Do we have to take it on faith?" "It needs some attention," the wounded man replied. "Is there a doc in town?"

"No doc, but Sherm here is almost as good."

"Fine. Would you mind looking at it, Mr. Howard?" Gray asked. Howard examined, washed, and dressed the wound. There could be no doubt it was authentic. After he had finished taking care of it, the fat man gave a decision.

"No objection to your staying here, Mr. Gray. This community doesn't aim to be hard on a man in a trouble. Of course, if Lee Chiswick finds out you are here, as he is liable to do, it will be up to you to look out for yourself."

Gray said he would try to do that.

Tony Flores, one of the vaqueros, rode in to the big house with word that there had been another raid on L C stock.

"How do you know?" Lee Chiswick demanded. "Ran across the tracks of the bunch being driven up Box canyon," the Mexican said.

"New tracks?" "I'd say not more than a day old, senor."

"Sure they were driven—that they weren't?" asked Dan Brand. Tony explained that he and the other boys had followed the cattle.

"To late to catch the thieves or pick up the stolen stock," Brand mumbled.

"The name is Gray in Arizona," corrected the crook-nosed man. "Worth two thousand on the hoof—or as meat, I reckon—down some way," Norris continued. "The other guys who helped rob the train only rate a five hundred apiece. But Mr. Duke—he's an honest-to-God Jesse James."

"Gray ignored the jeer. 'Like to correct you on one point, Mr. Norris. Two thousand on the hoof. Not a cent off shipped down in the coffin.' He thought it just as well to stress this, to avoid being shot in the back."

"That's right," Norris asserted. "I didn't read it casual. Well, Mr. Duke—Gray, I mean—it's a pleasure to meet up with a famous man like you."

"This is private information," the fugitive said. "I don't expect the word passed around among your friends. I'm lying low for a while, you understand."

"It still isn't clear to me what you were doing in the Sweet Spring valley," Curly insisted. "Or why you wanted to kill Lee Chiswick."

Gray smiled. "I was in the Sweet Spring valley because I had to get out of Tall Holt in a hurry on account of Curly Connor making a target out of me," he told the black-haired man cheerfully. "My I was going somewhere in a hurry, and I happened to land in the L C country. About your question, I reckon that's not information to your friends."

"You just shot at him for practice," Curly suggested. "I didn't shoot at him," Gray let his cold eyes rest on Norris. "I reckon that's not information to your friends."

"Meaning me?" asked Norris, his eyes blitted. "Meaning only that this has been talked over among you. Someone took a crack at Chiswick. Whoever it was, I could just see his figure in the alley, and I ripped loose at him."

Today In Kentucky

(Henry Ward)

The seventh session of the Kentucky General Assembly held since Albert Benjamin Chandler has been Governor of Kentucky draws near to an end that will not be lamented by the taxpayers or the legislators. Both are well satisfied for the time being, at least.

With the extraordinary session scheduled to end Saturday, the 12th Kentucky counties find that they have not been benefited particularly by the session which was called for the purpose of solving their financial problems. It was quite apparent that the administration legislative experts had not been able to concoct a proposal that would appear to be a life-saver for the counties without costing the state anything.

As the legislators prepared to return to their homes, talk of the possibility of another special session to be held before the August primary continued as a prime topic of conversation here. Governor Chandler has said he would call another session to consider legislation designed to contribute to progress in the program for the rehabilitation of the state prisons and hospitals, but some observers insist that he is considering the possibility of a passage of a measure which would permit the taxpayers to vote in the Democratic primary. Clifford Smith, Frankfort attorney and Chandlerite, denied that he is drafting such a proposal.

Even persons close to Governor Chandler admit that he and his political leaders are getting panicky which is the explanation for some of the blunders that have been made in recent weeks. One of these mis-steps provided proof that "Chandler for Senator" metal plates to be used on automobiles were made by convict labor at the state license plate plant in the Frankfort penitentiary.

When the Chandler tags began to make their appearance in Frankfort it was reported they were manufactured at the state plate factory. A resolution was introduced in the House asking that the superintendent of the plant explain whether the tags were made there at state expense and with convict labor. Administration leaders in the House indignantly denied the rumor, and insisted that the resolution be voted down. The Chandler-controlled legislators voted as requested.

But too many people knew that the tags had been made at the state plant. So Administration Floor leader, John Humphreys, came back with a statement signed by Remond Hamilton, superintendent of the factory, which certified that 150 of the tags were made there, but that Robert Humphreys, state commissioner of Highways, paid for the "out of his own pocket" at 50 cents each, which provided a very handsome profit for the state.

The Kentucky legislature, however, has specifically prohibited the employment of convicts in the state license plate factory in the manufacture of products for private interests or individuals. Section 3832 through 3836 of the Kentucky Statutes provide for the operation of this state plant for the manufacture of state license plates, road signs and markers, and for making license plates for other states and house numbers and street markers for Kentucky municipalities, and for no other purposes.

"The Chandler for Senator" plates were made at the state plant in violation of those statutes. And it is a strange coincidence that the very man who should know that the state auto license plate plant cannot be used for the manufacture of products for private use is Governor A. B. Chandler. The act providing for the establishment of the plant was passed by the General Assembly in 1930. It was sponsored in the State Senate by Senator A. B. Chandler. One of Albert Benjamin Chandler's first acts as a member of the Kentucky Senate in 1930 was to move that the Senate concur in a House resolution which called on the U. S. Congress to reduce the federal tax on tobacco "because it is confidently believed that a reduction of the assessed tax on manufactured tobacco products will give needed relief to those of this country engaged in the growing of tobacco."

One of Albert Benjamin Chandler's first acts as Governor of Kentucky was to ask the Kentucky General Assembly to impose high sales taxes on manufacture of tobacco products and to push through the legislature sales taxes on cigarettes.

Grant 4-H Club News

The third meeting of the Grant True Blue 4-H club was held Wednesday, March 30.

Mr. Dye asked the club questions about their circulars. The group captains made very favorable reports and we find that the sewing garden projects are tied for the highest membership with twelve members each. We scored our club and found that we had a total of 6165 points.

The president, Ray Denniston, appointed Elma Ryle and Becky Brye on the committee for food for the tour and Charles Newman and Wm. Tinklenberg on the committee to see about getting cars.

We adjourned with the repeating of the club pledge.

Record Performance Of Chevrolet Sedan

Given By CCC
Chaplain In Lexington, Idaho

A record of a year's performance by a 1936 Chevrolet Sport Sedan over a rough, arduous route comprising 15 civilian Conservation Corps camps in the Lexington, Idaho, district has just been released by Hoy E. Henriques, district chaplain.

The year ran from October 8, 1937 to October 6, 1937, and the car covered 20,001 miles of rough travel, the chaplain reported. Much of the mileage was accumulated over roads that were deep in backwoods mud and others that rose sharply over 3,000-foot hills.

Seven of the camps were in forest areas some of them as far as 60 miles off a main highway and accessible only by dirt roads under construction. Only three of the hills in the district boasted paved roads.

One camp, only 11 miles from the highway, offered the roughest road in the group. The chaplain reported it took him as long as five hours to make that 11 miles, all of it in low gear, because of the mud during the stormy season. Graded and deep snow blocked the road to another camp so that it took an hour to make the five miles on a crush rock highway.

The chaplain cited one grade, i. Lexington Loop, as being typical of the paved roads in the district. The grade in this case is 10 miles long and has a maximum grade of five per cent grade for 2,000 feet. Turns are steep in the road made a speed of more than 25 miles an hour impossible.

During the year, the Chevrolet used 11,155 gallons of gasoline, or an average of 193 miles per gallon. Selected runs showed mileage up to 21 miles per gallon.

So rough were many of the roads he was forced to travel, the chaplain declared, that through the original tries blew out before he had traveled 15,000 miles. The repairs averaged approximately one in 1,000 miles.

"It is impossible to convey the pleasure I have had in these 20,000 miles," the chaplain said. "And no matter what the weather or road condition, I have never missed an appointment through any fault of the Chevrolet."

Explains Method For Setting Burley Quota

How will marketing quotas for burley tobacco be established on individual farms?

The national burley marketing quota of 350 million pounds for 1938 to become effective if approved by two-thirds of those voting April 9 will be divided first through April 11 then among counties within the state; and then local committees will recommend quotas for individual farms in accordance with uniform rules, it is explained in a statement from the State Agriculture Conservation program office in Lexington.

Under these rules, the committees will consider past marketings of tobacco, with adjustments for abnormal weather and plant diseases, production facilities, rotation practices, and soil and other physical factors for the farm, in establishing farm quotas.

On small farms, where the average marketings have been less than 2,400 pounds of burley tobacco, the farm quota will be equal to the average marketing, plus normal production on acreage diverted from burley tobacco under past AAA programs. This does not mean, of course, that all small farms will receive a quota of 2,400 pounds. On farms where the average marketings have been more than 2,400 pounds, quotas will not be less than 2,400 pounds.

Quotas for new farms—farms on which tobacco is being produced in 1938 for the first time in five years will be limited to not more than the quotas that reasonably may be established for small farms. The maximum quota for a new farm probably will be 2,400 pounds.

Burley tobacco sold in excess of a farmer's marketing quota will be subject to a penalty at the time of sale of half its sale price, or not less than 3 cents per pound. The warehouseman or buyer will pay the penalty and deduct it from the price paid to the farmer. It is expected that regulations for transferring quotas among growers will be provided.

THIS and THAT

By MAOL-CHOLM

Since George and his After Thoughts have been transplanted to another field (George is doing nicely but After Thoughts died), we are going to try our hand at writing a column. At least one person told us they missed George's column, so maybe we can fill this vacancy. We hope you approve of our efforts, but if you don't—it is still a "filler," and that's something.

Well, Sunday is Easter. Guess at the "gals" will be coiled up in their new spring outfits, regardless of weather... and "pop" will, no doubt be wearing a cleaned and pressed last year's suit.

It seems that the Kiddie Novelty Revue to be given at the James Theatre, on April 29th, by the pupils of Mrs. Wm. J. Crouse, is to be quite an elaborate affair. Mrs. Crouse is adept at this sort of thing, and her revue's are always interesting... and by the way, Louise Schwalb did a swell job of making posters for the show. He's quite an artist.

We were indeed sorry to learn of our good friend, C. K. Gregory, losing his position at Simon Kenton High School. We have known him for a number of years, and think he's "tops." Hope he lands a good job elsewhere.

Men, your wife can't force you to take a bath. This was proven in a Cincinnati court, last week. All she can do is leave you.

It "Peers" that people who have been dumping garbage and junk on the estate of W. N. Hind on Verona Road at Salem, had better quit it pronto, or it'll be just too bad.

The Easter program to be given by the Christian and Methodist Churches, Sunday, will no doubt be interesting programs. Better plan to attend either or both.

Tomorrow is the anniversary of the sea's greatest disaster. On April 15, 1912, the Titanic was sunk and 1,000 lives were lost.

On Easter Sunday in 1918, the First American Division was in battle line at Montdidier, France.

What editor's car was being hunted Monday night as having been stolen—and the owner was driving same? For further information contact James H. Jupp.

Well, Readers (if any) I'm about run down—guess I'll turn out the light and toddle off to bed. I'll find seeing you—provided I can find something to scribble about next week.

Growers Favor Referendum

1,130 Boone County Growers Voted "Yes" Last Saturday

Eleven hundred and thirty Boone County tobacco growers in the AAA referendum held Saturday, April 9 voted "Yes" to 86 "No" for Burley tobacco marketing quotas in 1938 according to H. E. White, chairman of the Boone County AAA tobacco referendum Committee. A total of 1218 ballots were cast, two were mutilated, leaving 1216 to be recorded. An average of 92.9 per cent of growers favored quotas.

The turnout of growers was the largest on record and the percentage favoring was the largest of any previous referendum submitted to growers. Early returns from 108 of 114 counties in the state showed that 99,899 growers voted yes and 9,063 voted no for marketing quotas. Quotas for the state were approved by 91.7 per cent of the growers or 11 to 1 in favor. Other states have been reported as favoring quotas by good majorities. The national quota for Burley tobacco to be marketed this year is 350,000 pounds. Quotas to individual farmers will probably not be announced for several weeks yet.

CHAPTER IV—Talking over the smoking porch with Sorley, Ruth is incredulous of Jeff's story of shooting a rattlesnake rather than at her father, and later finds with Lee that he is right. When Lee arrives at Pat's camp, he finds only a few things left. Meanwhile, Jeff rides into Tall Holt and tells of a supposed capture of a rattlesnake. He shows Howard a poster with his picture and the name of Clint Duke, wanted as the leader of a band of outlaws and robbers. The rest of the band arrives.

Ruth knew from her father's description that they had been unsuccessful. She waited until after he had eaten to ask questions. While he smoked his pipe he told her of the expedition.

"This fellow Gray was in it," he said abruptly, when he had apparently finished.

She was clearing away the dishes and turned, slim figure alertly poised, to find out how he knew.

"Pat had checked up on his horse and knew the hoofprints," Chiswick explained. "They must have sent him here ahead of them to locate a good bunch to run off."

"And I believed his lies," Ruth said bitterly.

"Don't blame yourself for that. Frank might have fooled me, too. The fellow looks you right in the eye when he talks. He doesn't look like a sneaking coyote. Well, we live and learn, girl."

Frank Chiswick took a room at Ma Presnall's, the only place at Tall Holt which offered accommodations. He could see that the man who was eyed with surprise by one or two men who knew him, but he took no overt notice of that. To Curly he mentioned casually that he was waiting for an expected caller, but whom he was going to take back with him to the ranch. This information, he felt sure, would reach Shern, Howard and his rustler friends.

Once he caught sight of Lou Howard in the distance, and at that young man's strutting carriage, he felt his fists involuntarily clinch. He had an urge to change the contour temporarily of the man's vain, good-looking face, but he was under orders to keep out of trouble.

At the end of the second day he went back to his boarding-house completely bored. He washed up, and went down for supper.

At the long table in the dining-room Ma Presnall put him next a crook-necked stranger with reddish hair. Presently the man mentioned amiably that his name was Gray.

The words were a little shock to Frank. His swift gaze swept the man, down and up. He noted a certain pantherish lightness of body, a hard recklessness of face. A chill ran through young Chiswick. His first impulse was to fling out a challenge, but he remembered his father's instructions. He was not to get into trouble with their enemies.

Stiffly he answered, iron in his voice, "I am Frank Chiswick."

Two or three of those at the table were watching them.

"I reckon you don't feel friendly, Mr. Chiswick," drawled Gray.

"Would you expect me to feel friendly with a man who tried to murder my father and later asked to rustle his cattle?" Frank asked harshly.

"You've certainly got me wrong, sir," Gray replied, with unheeded courtesy. "But I don't expect I can convince you of that."

"Not in a hundred years," Frank retorted hotly. "I don't wish to talk with you, sir, or to know you when we meet."

"Short and sweet," Gray said with a smile, his manner cheerfully indifferent. "It's a blow, but I expect I'll have to get along without knowing Mr. Frank Chiswick."

He turned and began to talk with the man on the other side of him.

As soon as supper was over, Frank went to the landlady and asked her to change his seat to the other end of the table.

He turned and began to talk with the man on the other side of him.

As soon as supper was over, Frank went to the landlady and asked her to change his seat to the other end of the table.

The day after Frank reached Tall Holt, he saw Morgan Norris and Mike High jog into town and tie the hitchhiker in front of the Golden Nugget. Young Chiswick sauntered up the street and turned in at Curly Duke's place. He knew he would not be exactly welcome there, but the objection to his patronage would probably be expressed only in pointed hints.

Frank had no feeling of elation at what he had done, but he could not blame himself. To thrash a man who was too cowardly to fight was no pleasure. Yet he had at least stopped Howard from talking about Ruth. The fellow would keep his mouth shut after this.

It would be better to go back to the rooming-house, Chiswick decided. To hang around Main street now would be asking for trouble. Someone very likely would take on the quarrel for Lou. If so, it would be with guns. By morning a more reasonable point of view would obtain.

He turned into Main street down the alley beside the Golden Nugget.

CHAPTER VI—Frank called "Come in," and Jeff Gray walked into the bedroom. "What are you doing here?" Frank demanded, jumping to his feet.

"Like to have a few words with you," Gray said.

"I won't talk with you about anything," Frank cried, excited.

"Something important," Gray said.

"No," the boy exploded.

"I won't have you here," Chiswick barked at him. "Unless you want trouble, get out."

"I'm going to get out in just a minute. All I want is to tell you a few things. I've made new granddaughters, Barbara Ann and Elizabeth Mae Roberts, daughters Lou and Thomas Roberts; Barbara Ann and Thomas Roberts; Barbara Ann and Thomas Roberts."

Swiftly Gray whipped out his gun. "Don't make a mistake, Chiswick," he advised quietly.

"That's it," Frank said. "You're coming to kill me. Due to your contract call for me, too, as well as Father?"

"You damn fool," Gray broke out in a perspiration. "I never said a crazy family. I've come to tell you something, and you're going to listen to me whether you want to or not. Morgan Norris and Lou Howard are fixing to run you out."

"If they're so, would you be here telling me?" Frank asked, with a scornful lift of his lip.

"I am here, boy, forget what you've got against me. I overheard some talk. You'd better light out of town before they get you."

"Are you afraid if they do you'll lose the reward for me?" Gray shrugged his shoulders.

"Have it your own way. But listen what I've got to say. You're going to be watched. They will try to draw you into a fuss. At the right time you'll get it. Understand?"

"I understand you ate supper with my father and tried to gun him from behind afterward," Frank told him wildly. "And that you loaded my sister with lies so she took you to one of our line-camps to be decorated. We got you, didn't we, fellow? You were with the thieves who drove our stuff up Box canyon. What's the use of pulling this line of talk when I know you are in cahoots with these rustlers here—with the very scoundrels you are warning me against?"

Gray swept this aside with a gesture of the revolver. "All right. Leave it lay at that. I'm a hired killer and a thief. I'm paying off a grudge I owe Lou Howard and his outlaw crew. That would make a double double-cross. Put it any way you like. But get this through your noodle. If you stick around here another day, you'll go home in a wagon covered by a sheet."

"No," the boy exploded.

"I won't have you here," Chiswick barked at him. "Unless you want trouble, get out."

"I'm going to get out in just a minute. All I want is to tell you a few things. I've made new granddaughters, Barbara Ann and Elizabeth Mae Roberts, daughters Lou and Thomas Roberts; Barbara Ann and Thomas Roberts; Barbara Ann and Thomas Roberts."

Swiftly Gray whipped out his gun. "Don't make a mistake, Chiswick," he advised quietly.

"That's it," Frank said. "You're coming to kill me. Due to your contract call for me, too, as well as Father?"

"You damn fool," Gray broke out in a perspiration. "I never said a crazy family. I've come to tell you something, and you're going to listen to me whether you want to or not. Morgan Norris and Lou Howard are fixing to run you out."

"If they're so, would you be here telling me?" Frank asked, with a scornful lift of his lip.

"I am here, boy, forget what you've got against me. I overheard some talk. You'd better light out of town before they get you."

"Are you afraid if they do you'll lose the reward for me?" Gray shrugged his shoulders.

"Have it your own way. But listen what I've got to say. You're going to be watched. They will try to draw you into a fuss. At the right time you'll get it. Understand?"

"I understand you ate supper with my father and tried to gun him from behind afterward," Frank told him wildly. "And that you loaded my sister with lies so she took you to one of our line-camps to be decorated. We got you, didn't we, fellow? You were with the thieves who drove our stuff up Box canyon. What's the use of pulling this line of talk when I know you are in cahoots with these rustlers here—with the very scoundrels you are warning me against?"

Gray swept this aside with a gesture of the revolver. "All right. Leave it lay at that. I'm a hired killer and a thief. I'm paying off a grudge I owe Lou Howard and his outlaw crew. That would make a double double-cross. Put it any way you like. But get this through your noodle. If you stick around here another day, you'll go home in a wagon covered by a sheet."

CHAPTER VI—Frank called "Come in," and Jeff Gray walked into the bedroom. "What are you doing here?" Frank demanded, jumping to his feet.

"Like to have a few words with you," Gray said.

"I won't talk with you about anything," Frank cried, excited.

"Something important," Gray said.

"No," the boy exploded.

Quotations from Wayne Dinsmore

International Grassland conference

"There is ample evidence to indicate that legumes have a direct beneficial effect on the growth of grasses associated with them."

"At Ottawa, mixtures of grasses and legumes have consistently out-yielded pure species."

It pays to inoculate Legumes "inoculated legumes bearing abundant nodules on their roots secrete nitrogen from the air, some of which is used for the legume itself and some excreted from the nodules into the soil, where it enhances the growth of associated non leguminous plants. This does not occur till nodules are formed. Legumes should be inocu-ated."

Pasture is the cheapest of all feed grown on the farm. If properly managed, Pastures may be improved by rotation of the grazing period, by mowing and by the addition of legumes like lespedza.

Brooder Crowding Means

Chick Loss

Two hundred and fifty chicks are enough for a 10 by 10 brooder house 300 for a 10 by 12 house, says Kentucky College of Agriculture in a statement which blames overcrowding for many losses of chicks in artificial brooding. While day-old chicks do not require much space they increase in size quickly, and before the owner realizes what is happening they may be dying from lack of air. Many poultry raisers now use sun porches, built on to the brooder house and floored with half-inch mesh hardware cloth or planks which gives the chicks more room and keeps them off the ground.

The Caterpillar

Caterpillars, commonly called cankerworms, inchworms or measuring worms, are characterized chiefly by the fact that they crawl in a looping motion and, when disturbed, may drop from the foliage and hang in mid-air suspended by a fine silken thread. They feed upon most of the common broad-leaved shade and forest trees and among their favorite hosts are ash, elm, hickory, linden, maple and oak and also apple trees. By eating small irregular holes in the leaf tissue, cankerworms sometimes consume the entire leaf except the larger veins.

Westmore Engineering Company

Northern Kentucky's Leading Service In Paving Of Streets, Driveways, etc.

Nowhere in this section of Northern Kentucky is there a paving concern with a greater record for satisfactory service in asphalt paving of streets, highways, private and public drives, parking places, tennis courts and in fact any or all paving projects.

They employ in their organization only such workmen as they can depend upon for reliable and competent work and they have provided the most modern equipment for prompt and satisfactory paving of streets and roads which will outlast even future generations.

The subject of building good streets and other projects is a distinctive occupation and one which requires both wide experience and modern and complete equipment. This firm is under direction of Mr. West and Mr. Moore, men who have made extended study and research in both material and method and are leading authorities in an advisory capacity.

When a committee of public officials announces that a contract for street paving construction has been let to Westmore Engineering Company, there is evidenced general satisfaction on the part of the public.

Many of their contracts executed in the past years are giving complete and lasting service today and it is not to be wondered at that their services are so much in demand.

The thorough manner in which they execute all contracts and the public spirited policies which have always governed their operations have won for the concern a warm place in the hearts of the people.

It is fitting and proper that we make special mention of this concern and we wish to join you in appreciation of what an important part the paving concern occupies in the progress of any community and in closing advise our officials to give Westmore Engineering Company due consideration in all contracts.

They are at all times at the absolute service of the people of this section and is among Covington's prominent, reliable realty dealers with a reputation for two things—experience and dependability—the things that count most when it comes to dealing in real estate—experience in local condition as to actual values and dependability of a known quality.

Without these conditions, buyers and sellers are at the mercy of the man who stands between them. It is therefore well to consider such matters, carefully before entering any transaction or agreement. In this respect we know of no other firm that stands higher in the estimation of the general public than the Bennett Realty Company, office in Covington.

If you are ready to buy, sell or exchange real estate or have some money you wish to invest with safety, we unhesitatingly recommend the concern to all readers and commend the entire personnel on their satisfactory service. DOLLS OLD AND NEW

Nothing has changed more in our lifetime than dolls. The rag doll still found, does not have the importance it formerly had. It used to be the badge of the very small child boy or girl. Frequently it was nearly as large as the little toddler who dragged it around all day and took it to bed with him at night. From rather rough treatment it soon became a sorry-looking spectacle, with grease and dirt all over it. One little girl that I knew fed her doll a sausage, leaving over afterward a round, greasy smudge on the shape of the sausage. The china-headed dolls are used to play with were made by people who apparently knew nothing about anatomy, for they were exceedingly slender and shapeless. I strongly suspect the same people as the authors of the slaty figures in most fashion plates. The bodies of these dolls were stuffed with sawdust; hence the modest expression about having a pain in one's sawdust after a heavy Christmas dinner. Too rough treatment often destroyed the shapeliness, such as it was, of these dolls, for the sawdust oozed away and could never be replaced very skillfully. We dressed our dolls as children still do, with plenty of interest but with very little skill. I once owned a doll that I dressed as a boy, though it had the same inane expression of sexlessness that other dolls had, a blank stare that may have betokened more sense than that of the human beings that devised it. Sometimes there were dolls that were slightly different and much more expensive dolls that older sisters or mothers had dressed up in clothes of another day and generation. These were lovingly kept hidden in a trunk or a chest of drawers sacred relics of other days. Queer old buttons, odd styles of dresses and coats, even queer shoes—all these made the old-fashioned doll a source of wonder to younger brothers and sisters who could not recall the days when these same things were the latest style for Big Sister or Mother. Changes have come rapidly in the styles of dolls and other toys. I suspect that the teddy bear has done more than any other toy to bring about this change. A great toy manufacturer told me that his company would make only a few of any type of toy at first and then try them out on children. If a majority of the little fellows took them to bed at night, similar toys would be run off by the millions. This same man said that his company had made several millions of the monkey that climbs a string, the most consistently popular single toy ever made. I suppose that my old likes and dislikes are unchangeable, but many of the modern toys seem hideously ugly and unnecessarily so. Some of the toys are beautiful and artistic but why should there be also those ugly, nightmarish things that one would hate to meet in the dark woods at twilight? I see no reason why babies should be forced to live among ugly things when beauty is everywhere about us, and as you would expect me as a Scotchman to say equally cheap. The most exquisite trains and cars and dolls are exhibited on the same counter with other things that look like the dreams of a victim of delirium tremens. Baby dolls, pretty as pictures are often side by side with others that look like patients that had escaped from the psychopathic ward. Our old toys were not so pretty and they were more dumb-looking, but at least they were not deliberately made hideous.

King Arthur and His Knights

Modern critics are inclined to doubt the ancient tale about King Arthur and his knights, but in Tintagel, England, the Arthurian legend is so strong that a stone monument hall has been erected in honor of the monarch who it is said have led the Christian kings of Britain against the Saxons of Kent in the Sixth century.

A Live Wire Briar Hopper

An Explanation! Why I am having my Briar Hopper stories reprinted; all but a few of my original stories were lost in the flood, having a great many requests for the stories am having them reprinted with the intention of putting them in book form with other interesting matter—Will S. Norris

DIXIE STORIES, ANECDOTES, SAYINGS; SOME OLD, SOME NEW, SOME ORIGINAL AND SOME OTHERWISE.

By WILL S. NORRIS, 5822 Belmont Ave., Cincinnati, Ohio.

A brother in need is a brother indeed. This is a true story which came under my observation when I was a young man starting in life and it made a lasting impression on me there were two brothers, Will and Tom Will, the senior, was highly educated, a graduate from one of the leading theological colleges of his day. I often thought he should have been a preacher, but he studied and practiced law. From my viewpoint there are a great many misfits in the vocations of men's lives, which cause a great many life failures. Rev. Talage, the great Brooklyn Divine said there were two important things for men and women to do—to find their sphere and live and fill it. Parents often make the mistake of trying to force their children into vocations or work to which they are not adapted, which often makes their life a burden of a failure and which causes so many losses and crosses. Will was a good lawyer but a poor financial getting into such financial straits that he became discouraged and began losing his law practice, lost interest in his church and was on the road to complete failure. Tom, who was a good financier and accumulating money, saw his brother on the road to ruin, domed by discouragement and nearly down and out. Tom sent for Will to come to his home. They studied his situation and found his debts to amount to several thousand dollars, a large amount in that day. Tom said, "Will, I will pay off your indebtedness and put you financially on your feet if you will straighten up, take up your law practice and be a man."

Tom's wife, Fannie, was present and Will said to her: "Fannie, what do you think about Tom paying out all his money for me?" She replied: "If it aught with me if you promise to come back to church and take up your old duties. Stick to God and the church." Will promised to do this and did. Tom did a great thing for his brother. Fannie did a greater thing as a sister-in-law and showed a wonderful spirit. She received a great blessing from her action in the matter. Tom got a greater blessing from seeing his brother regain his place and standing as a lawyer and a churchman.

MOET everyone likes baked ham—and this one favorite that is set off so well by many diverse fruits and preserves. With spiced cherries we have yet to find a man, woman or child who can turn away from this luscious blending of flavors!

BAKED HAM WITH SPICED CHERRIES

1 slice ham, 1 1/2 1/16 teaspoon soda inches thick 2 1/2 to 2 3/4 cups (about 2 1/2 1/2 cups pounds) milk
9 whole cloves 4 tablespoons 8 tablespoons 4 tablespoons brown sugar water

Spiced Cherries
Place the ham in a buttered baking dish slightly larger than the slice of ham. Stick in the cloves and sprinkle with the brown sugar. Dissolve the soda in about 1 1/2 cups of the milk or just enough to barely cover the ham. Pour over the ham and bake in a moderate oven (350°F.) for about 1 1/2 hours or until tender. Remove the ham from the baking dish and measure the milk. Add enough milk to make 2 cups and heat. Add four and water mixed to a smooth paste and cook, stirring constantly until thickened. Garnish the ham with the Spiced Cherries, as illustrated, and serve with the cream gravy. Make Spiced Cherries as follows:

1 two-inch stick 1 No. 2 can of cinnamon or 2 1/2 cups of whole cloves cooked
1/2 teaspoon cherries ground nutmeg 1/4 cup sugar

Tie up the spices in a muslin bag. Place the cherries, cherry juice, sugar and spice bag in a sauce pan and stir until sugar is dissolved. Cover and cook over low heat for about 20 minutes. Remove from the heat and allow to cool in the pan. Drain cherries and serve with the ham. Serves six.

"Take You Home Kathleen"
The song "I'll Take You Home Again Kathleen" was composed in 1875 by Thomas P. Westendorf at Plainfield, Ind., while he was a music instructor at the Indiana Boys' school. A memorial, a bronze plaque mounted on a base of Bedford stone, is on the site where the song was first played and sung. The memorial was dedicated September 23, 1929, bears the chorus of the ballad, and is inscribed: "This tablet is placed in commemoration of the author of this song said by Thomas Edison to be one of America's immortal ballads."

Electrical Discharges, Sour Milk
According to one authority, the electrical discharge during a thunderstorm probably affects the composition of the atmosphere and may have a souring effect on milk. Experiments made by scientists, however, fail to confirm this; they explain that thunderstorms frequently occur toward the end of hot summer days, and souring is likely to follow on such days, whether there is thunder or not.

Keys a Foot Long

When, in 1147, the Moors were driven out of Lisbon, many of them locked their houses and took away the keys. General Sinfaro found hundreds of such keys when he finally subdued the Moors. In Spain and Portugal there are found keys six to twelve inches long. They are believed to be duplicates of those the Moors removed.

"Picketing" Was Torture

Twenty-six soldiers of the United States army were placed on trial in Chillicothe, Ohio, in 1914 on charges of desertion. Five were sentenced to be shot, while most of the others were ordered "picketed," which meant they must stand with their bare heels resting on a sharp pointed stick that stuck up from the ground.

Today in Kentucky

(Henry Ward)

Frankfort, Ky., April 18.—Political advisers of Governor Chandler weighed accomplishments of and reaction from the special session of the Kentucky General Assembly which has just ended, have concluded that he should not call another session before the primary election in August.

Even administration leaders in the legislature agreed that Chandler weakened his position in the U. S. Senatorial contest by the floundering efforts to get the legislators to approve measures designed to secure support for him in the race. His biggest loss of strength came because of the fiasco over the bill designed to ban Sunday sales of beer. Chandler started out in favor of a statewide prohibition against Sunday beer and liquor, then, faced with a revolt against him in Northern Kentucky where he expected to be strong, he gave his approval to an amendment to permit Sunday sales in cities of the first, second and third classes. To help him out, Lieutenant-Governor Keen Johnson, crown prince of the Chandler administration, twice voted to break ties in the Senate to permit Sunday sales, but strong sentiment in the House finally forced passage of the original act under which no beer can be sold on Sunday.

The result has been that Chandler lost support from both sides of the fence. The advocates of Sunday beer blame him for injecting the fight into the special session, and the dries were not pleased because he tried to switch horses in the middle of the stream.

Several Republican legislators who have been Chandler supporters through thick-and-thin and other Republican friends have been trying to persuade him that this only chance to defeat Senator Alton W. Barkley in the contest for the Senatorial nomination is for him to get his legislature to amend the primary election law to provide a method for Republicans to take an active part in the Barkley-Chandler fight and to vote in the primary election. They are telling him that Kentucky Republicans would vote for him in order to defeat Barkley and thereby deal a body blow to the Roosevelt administration. Under the plan they propose, the names of all candidates would be placed on one ballot, which would be given to all registered voters, regardless of party affiliation. The Republicans would have only one candidate for the Senate so he would win the nomination without opposition, and leave the way clear for the Republicans to vote for Chandler or Barkley.

Chandler has not yet succumbed to the lure of this proposition, however. Some of his Democratic friends have been pointing out to him that it might aid him in his ambition to become a United States Senator, but it would play havoc with the Democratic party and wipe out any hope his administration might have of succeeding itself by electing the next Governor.

The Chandler Democratic-Republican combine in the House administered a slap to President Roosevelt in the closing days of the special session by killing a resolution which sought to express appreciation to the President and the National Administration for efforts to help the aged and the needy.

The resolution, introduced by Everett Bach, blind but able Representative from Breathitt County pointed out that the national administration, under the leadership of President Roosevelt, has provided funds to assist the unemployed and to enable the state to grant pensions to the aged needy and commended the president for what has been done. It was opposed by Representative Claud Hammons, Knox County. Republican supporter of Chandler. Representative Ford Gnaou, of Louisville, a Chandlerite, made a motion that it be referred to the committee on Kentucky Statutes No. 1, which was composed entirely of Chandlerites, and that motion was approved by the Chandler-controlled bloc of Democrats and Republicans. The committee never reported the resolution for approval.

An effort to get the House to adopt a resolution condemning the national administration because the WPA wage scale in rural Kentucky is not as high as in some industrial states was dropped when Chandlerites who were pressing the proposal were reminded that the national administration has made enough money available to Kentucky so that 200 a month pensions could be paid to the aged needy but the state legislature, at the demand of Governor Chandler, has refused to match the funds.

One administration leader, speaking "out of school," confessed that much now about that special session of Congress held last fall which he has mentioned frequently in recent speeches. He criticized the Roosevelt leaders for failing to get the action they desired on several controversial pieces of legislation.

"Chandler can say much about that now, after the fizzle his special session of the legislature has been," the aforementioned administration leader agreed. The session was called to relieve the financially embarrassed and distressed counties of the state, and finally managed to pass a bill which reminded Senate Majority Leader Ralph Gilbert of the popular song: "I Can't Give You Anything But Love, Baby." The state won't give the counties anything through this "aid" bill other than love. One legislator, remembering the Chandler registration purporting bill, voted for the "County aid" measure with the explanation: "This bill doesn't do the counties any good, but at least it won't hurt them much, which is something unusual."

A lot of "emergencies" arose in Kentucky while the legislature was in special session, and Governor Chandler then, by amending his call for the session, including a total of 50 subjects to be considered. Biggest of these emergencies apparently was one of interest to theatre operators who want to continue operation of "bank night" schemes. A bill which sought to legalize "bank nights" and other forms of gift enterprises, (which incidentally, have been held illegal by Kentucky courts, under the State constitution) was passed at the regular session of the legislature. Governor Chandler vetoed it, explaining he had been informed that the bill would be unconstitutional, and further that he opposed it for moral reasons. Three weeks later he amended his call for the special session by suggesting that the "bank night" legislation bill be passed again. The real reason back of the be some controversy over it, and it might be a good idea to let the courts decide on the issue, forgetting that the courts have decided it. So his legislature passed the bill again. The real reason back of the Governor's reversal on this measure was the fact he received information that several theatres, offended by his veto of the original bill planned to oppose him in the Senatorial race.

Considerable interest, and controversy too, was created last week by the "nomination" of Representative Rhodes K. Myers of Bowling Green, for Lieutenant-Governor of the Chandler ticket. That put Chandler on a spot, because John Kirtley, speaker of the House, and John Hummelt, House floor leader both would like to get the nomination next year.

LIVING ARCHAEOLOGY
It is interesting to probe around in beds of ashes and dust left by a former race, to pick up as it had just dropped, some spearhead or arrowhead, fashioned by an unknown Indian brave. Archaeology has a fascination for all sorts of people, professional or amateur. Right in our midst, chiefly unregarded because it is common, is an archaeology that is equally interesting. It is not regarded as true archaeology since it is still partially alive, but hardly a generation hence it will assume an importance equal to that of any other time and place. All archaeology was once living, present reality. The Indian or the cave man who cooked his shellfish or his deer or ground his corn was no more conscious of being queer than you and I are. What he did was traditional, already approved by his immediate ancestors, who had taught him what he knew, practically all that was common knowledge in his tribe. He hunted or fished or trapped or cultivated plants in the accepted fashion. Certain things were holy, others were tabu, still others

We are so intent on believing that our way is the right way that we fail to see the paths in the passing of institutions right in our own time. Those who are in style feel so superior to those who are behind that it takes many a year to evaluate anything that is not up-to-date. Within our own lifetime we have re-adjusted ourselves several times to changes, probably feeling each time that the world was better, though it may have been only different. Thirty years ago it was evident that many things that had lasted for generations were on the verge of change. New methods had come, the railroads had penetrated nearly every part of the country, a fairly good standard of education was being demanded, newspapers were finding their way into even remote places, foods and clothing were rapidly becoming standardized. Thirty years is a brief time as humanity reckons time, but so many things have changed that even in that time living people are literally artifacts of another time and place. To many of the younger generation these oldtimers are as queer as any spearheads or arrowheads dug up in the ashes around old campfires. Before these living specimens of archaeology entirely disappear, it is the province of scholars and antiquarians to put into some permanent record the stamp and image of the past, not that these old customs may be revived or kept from dying but that those who come after us can know accurately what we have been like.

OAKLAND GALLATIN COUNTY

Easter Sunday has come and passed and was a lovely, balmy spring day. We hope all that could attend church services at their different places of worship, did so, and many after church visited with friends and their loved ones.

The many friends of Hix Noel are sorry to hear of his serious illness. There were many in this vicinity who were saddened to hear of the sudden death of Rev. J. A. Miller of Elmore. He had many friends here, having held revival services at the Oakland church. All sincerely sympathize with his family in this sad bereavement.

Mr. and Mrs. Arch Maddox and son Charles and daughter Virginia of Glencoe, Mr. and Mrs. George Bowie and little son Ralph of Anchorage, and Mr. and Mrs. James Brown of Covington, were guests of their parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. I. Brown of this place Easter Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Brock and family and Robert Leary of Brookville, Ind., Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Swango and two little sons of near Glencoe, and Misses Lizzie and Lucy Leary were the Sunday guests of Mrs. J. T. Leary and son Warren. In the afternoon Mr. and Mrs. Brock and family visited his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Sam Brock of Poplar Grove in Owen County.

A Live Wire Briar Hopper

An Explanation! Why I am having my Briar Hopper stories reprinted; but but a few of my original stories were lost in the flood, having a great many requests for the stories I am having them reprinted with the intention of putting them in book form with other interesting matter—WILL S. NORRIS.

DIXIE STORIES, ANECDOTES, SAYINGS; SOME OLD, SOME NEW, SOME ORIGINAL AND SOME OTHERWISE.

By WILL S. NORRIS, 5822 Belmont Ave., Cincinnati, Ohio.

A friend of mine said to me, "Why don't you write a story about girls and women? Here goes. Come with me to an old hard-shelled Baptist brick church at Crane Springs in Madison County Ky. This church was built more than 130 years ago and apparently is as good as the day it was built. It was used for school purposes as well as church services."

A good many years ago, a little white-headed boy attended this school with a good looking Kentucky girl. How soon this pair became sweethearts it would be difficult to say. They proved to be the champion spellers in the school. The teacher, Uncle Joe Embury was a strong advocate of the three R's and spelling, encouraging his pupils with prizes. Being a splendid penman, he drew two beautiful pictures with colored inks, one a nice bouquet or roses and the other a lady on horse-back with two greyhounds following her. He offered them as first and second prizes for the first and second best spellers. The two sweethearts became the last two contenders after doing some real spelling. They finally tied on the 318 words to be spelled and defined. Then came the tug of war who should have first choice. The boy chose the roses, which gave the girl the lady on horse-back. This was always a sweet remembrance to him, feeling that he had acted a gentleman, got his choice and won a stronger love for his sweetheart and the admiration of all of the school.

This boy has also been an admirer of good women and good horses. He wrote the following article for a saddle horse sale at Lexington. "There are mighty few people that have any red blood, who do not love a horse better than an automobile, especially the ladies, who want something to give a nice name, love, pet and feed sugar to. Who ever saw a lady feeding sugar to or petting an automobile. I challenge the world to show me anything more attractive than a good looking lady riding a real saddle horse."

Mother Nature smilingly bestowed upon our doubting heads one of the most glorious of Easter Sundays. Every turn of the road opened up a new and lovely vista to motorists. And in mentioning Easter it always seems necessary to make note of the various multi-colored Easter bunnies that brighten and enliven the church pews. They are fast becoming a tradition, and we think they add a very fitting splash of color to all Easter gatherings. Speaking of Easter bunnies to mind the true incident related to us a few hours ago.

A little girl rose up early this Easter morning and went outside to play before dressing for Sunday School. Naturally her mind was filled with plans and ideas for the egg-hunt; to be enjoyed in the afternoon. The mother, not hearing the little girl as usual, hollowed out the window "What are you doing, Jane?" "Oh mother, do you know what?" replied Jane. "I've found some little ants here and they are having an egg-hunt, too."

Mr. and Mrs. Everette Jones and children spent Sunday with the Shields family.

Mr. and Mrs. Gatewood called on Mr. and Mrs. Frank Sebree, Sunday afternoon.

Hamilton Seniors held their banquet at the school building Tuesday evening of last week. The tables were beautifully decorated for the occasion by members of the Junior class. Freshmen and Sophomores were given a party on the same evening by Miss Velma Jean Ogden.

Grapes for the Home

Time to spray grapes is almost here. Early sprays are necessary for the protection of fruit from black rot. This disease can be best controlled by the spray of Bordeaux mixture used (1) when the new growth is about one inch long, (2) pre-bloom spray, when the blooms are open and (3) post-bloom spray when the bloom is nearly complete.

These sprays are necessary to control the black rot. Detailed instructions on spraying and complete spray schedule, as well as other practices in grape growing for the home are explained in College of Agriculture Extension Division Circular No. 209 entitled "Grapes for the Home". A copy of this circular can be obtained from the Experiment Station at Lexington, Ky. It should be in the reference file of all persons who are interested in growing grapes for the home.

The following major topics are discussed in the Circular: Propagation, soil and planting, pruning and training, cultivation, fertilizers, varieties, control of insect and disease, spraying, preparation of the Bordeaux mixture and other important items.

Grape juice is an important addition to the home fruit budget. It has an important place during the winter months when fruits are scarce. Each farm home can have an abundance of juicy grapes to eat from the vine and also juice for winter use if they will follow the suggestions outlined in Circular 209.

Phosphate Available To All Farmers In ACP

TVA phosphate, testing 40 per cent is available to all farmers in the Agricultural Conservation Program on terms similar to those of last year, according to H. R. Fork county agent. Farmers are urged to take advantage of the phosphate offer immediately as the supply was exhausted by mid-summer last year.

Farmers this year may secure up to 80 per cent of their 1938 ACP soil building allowance in lieu of cash payments for soil building practices carried out. The farmer in securing his phosphate, agrees to use it only on grass and legume crops.

The farmer receives credit for the use of phosphate at approximately the same rate it is charged against his earnings. The only cash outlay to the farmer is the freight and handling charge at the time of delivery at the railroad station. This cost will be approximately $7.25 per ton.

Phosphate on carefully checked demonstration work in Boone County has increased grass and clover yields approximately 91.8 per cent. Lime and phosphate together increased yields an average of 251 per cent with still more favorable increases where phosphate, lime and a light covering of manure were used.

The profitable returns secured from phosphate on most farms, with the possibility the supply may be exhausted again by mid summer, makes it important that every farmer should file his request immediately. His request should include not only his phosphate needs for this spring but also for the fall. Farmers should also plan for their limestone needs at the earliest possible date. Applications for 75 per cent phosphate may be filed any week day between the hours of 8:00 a. m. and 4:30 p. m. at the county agent's office in Burlington.

4-H Clubs Prepare For Rally Day

The 4-H clubs of Boone County are holding their fourth series of community club meetings this week and next week, according to Jack Byrd, assistant county agent. The club members are busy making plans for 4-H spring Rally Day which will be held at Burlington on May 14th. Rally Day will be an all day affair and one eagerly anticipated by those who have attended Rally Day in the past.

Foremost among the activities of the day is the contest among demonstration teams. The winning teams in Agriculture and in Home Economics get a trip to the District contest at Wilmington. The demonstration takes about 15 minutes and should show a practice related to the members 4-H project. Adults may be surprised to find how much they can learn from these club boys and girls.

Engine and Nineteen Freight Cars Leave Track at Elliston, Sunday

Brakeman Killed, Engineer and Fireman Injured

Worst Wreck in Years

Elliston, Ky., was scene of the worst wreck of the L. & N. Railroad Company since 1917, when the Pan American crashed into the rear of a local passenger train at Bardonia Junction, killing and maiming a score of the local train's passengers.

Twenty cars loaded with potatoes, cattle and hogs jumped the track at Elliston, killing the head brakeman J. T. Tate of Louisville, Kentucky and seriously injuring the engineer and fireman. M. C. Gordon and Morris Selfried.

Gordon, who suffered severe burns, internal injuries and bruises was said to be in a serious condition and very little hope for his recovery. Selfried's condition was reported as fair. He received burns and a rib fracture.

The train Latonia bound from Louisville, was 32 miles southwest of Covington when the accident occurred. It had departed at 11:10 o'clock Sunday morning and was due in Latonia at 3:00 o'clock.

Paul J. O'Connell, chief dispatcher, Covington, said the immediate cause of the derailment had not been determined at this time, but it was believed, however, to have resulted from bucking of the track.

Pate and the two men were riding in the cab of the locomotive. Another brakeman and a conductor riding in the caboose of the 35-car train were not injured.

Raymond Brown (colored) Louisville, a hobo, one of eight, six colored and two whites was slightly injured. Raymond said there was a sudden crash and the cars seemed to climb into the air. They were forced to jump for their lives and only providence seemed to save them, for if it had not been for one of the hobs insisting on riding on the rear of the train when they left Louisville they all would have met sudden death. Brown said his "hobo days" were over as soon as he could get back home.

Seventeen of the 19 cars derailed contained perishables, mostly potatoes. O'Connell said. He said he could not give an estimate of the damage, but most of the cargo was lost.

When the L. & N. officials started selling potatoes at 50 cents a bag, Monday the word spread fast and by two o'clock, Elliston, was crowded with trucks, merchants from all parts of the country, but to their disappointment to find that the sale had been stopped until 8 a. m. Tuesday, so the maintenance crew could finish their work unhindered. When sale of these potatoes were resumed the price was raised to $1.85 per bag.

The first train cleared Elliston at about 7:00 a. m. Tuesday.

Young Men's Democratic Club Dance Huge Success

The Young Men's Democratic Club dance held at the White Villa Club House, Florence, Saturday night, was a success far above our expectations. There was an overflowing crowd and a good time was had by all present. The writer has had praise for the orchestra and the 10-act floor show which kept the audience spell bound during their performances, and the orchestra was in perfect accord with the nimble feet of the Young Democrats, as they glided over the floor. The older Democrats should take a page from the book of the Young Democrats, for they are progressive and bear watching.

"Any club officer or member, who shall pledge his club's support to any candidate in a primary election shall automatically forfeit his right of membership and shall be expelled from the club."

A. L. Hager, landscape architect, Ft. Mitchell, advised Boone County Utopia club members Thursday night that most of the Boone County farm houses could be made beautiful at very little cost. Check Your Brakes and Lights

Police Are Stopping Motorists Who Do Not Have Proper Lights, Etc.

It has become necessary for the State Police to take steps in curbing the unlawful driving in the city of Walton for the safety of its citizens. The speed mania with their poor brakes and faulty lights, must be curbed if this city is to be safe. It is almost impossible to cross main street at any time of day or night. Walton does not propose a speed trap, but it does believe in safety, and any person or person that object to the curbing of this lawlessness, is only harboring a criminal.

Our children will soon be out of school and will spend more leisure hours in the outdoors. They have been thoroughly instructed in our school on safety, but they have perfect right of crossing the street when ever they desire. They some times become a bit careless, but if a car is maintained with good lights horn, and brakes, and in the hands of a safe driver there is little to fear.

So follows citizens of Walton let's get behind this movement and give the State Police our support and help to save the possibility of one of our children or citizens from being murdered before our eyes—Editor.

Officer Brugh and Judge Farris states there would be no exception to these requirements.

Order Phosphate Now

Farmers are urged to order their ACP phosphate needs on their ACP soil building allowance now, according to H. R. Forkner, county agent. Several car load orders have already been made by many Boone County farmers. It takes several days to receive a car shipment after it is ordered. Farmers should also order their fall phosphate now because the present supply will likely be exhausted before next fall.

Farmers desiring to get phosphate to carry out soil building practices may receive up to 80% of their allowance in lieu of cash payments. Only cash charge is the freight and handling charge when the fertilizer is delivered.

The county agent's office is glad to take your application on any week day between the hours of 8:00 a. m. and 4:30 p. m.

Insure Your Land Against Soil Losses

By Adopting Soil Conservation Practices

Farmers may insure their land against soil losses by adopting soil conservation practices, according to Ward T. Darnell, superintendent of CCC Camp-SCS-5-Ky., at Walton Ky.

Under this type of insurance which safeguards the soil for future generations, the farmers pay the premium in their own efforts to protect their own land. These efforts include the use of strip cropping, good pasture sod, cover crops, and proper woodland management.

"Like the premiums on many forms of insurance, soil insurance premiums often pay dividends in addition to the protection they afford," he explained. "Properly managed woodlands provide valuable wood products. Sod crops and meadows which protect the land against erosion also provide grazing and hay. Legumes used in rotation build up the fertility of the land even while they guard it against washing."

Soil insurance, Darnell said, also provides an annuity in increased yields and better balanced farming as well as benefits for future generations through protection of the soil.

THIS and THAT

Hurry! Hurry! Get your tickets for the one and only Kiddie Novelty Revue, to be given at the James Theatre, on Friday evening, April 29, at 8:00. We think it'll be quite a show—the kiddies are really going to "strut their stuff." You don't want to miss it, do you?

Schools in the Boone County system are closing this week, having completed their eight months. We know the pupils like the idea of not having to stress over the "three R's" during the hot weather, but the thought of a four month vacation makes the teachers "very unhappy." It's kinda tough.

A number of our citizens have been trading to Elliston, where "spuds" are selling at bargain prices at present. The reason—it carloads were in the train wreck at the above mention place, Sunday afternoon. A lot of "stewie" eh!

The Junior play given Friday night was quite a good show. It had lots of good comedy, and those present seemed to enjoy it. However, not a very large number were present. People here don't seem to support school activities as they once did. Maybe it's because of other interests—but you should not forget your school and its programs, etc.

The Seniors of W.-V. will present their play, "On Susan," at the school auditorium on May 20th. It's quite a "spell" before presentation, but remember the time and give them your support by being present.

Business was rising at the Walton Garage, Tuesday night. State Police were stopping all cars not having tail lights, thus all the business.

You may already know it, but lest you forget—be sure and attend the merchant's drawing to be held in front of the post office, Saturday afternoon at 3 p. m. Several hundred were on hand last week, and there should be more this time. Well, the more, the merrier.

Did you know? That on April 27, 1822, Ulysses S. Grant, 18th president of these United States, was born at Ft. Pleasant, Ohio.

TO RIDE WITH WILLIAM MACLEOD RAINE

CHAPTER IV—Talking over the stout, red-headed man, Ruth saw a story of shooting at the assassin father-in-law at her father, and she pleaded with Lee to listen to him. When Lee arrived at Pat's place, he found only a note to Pat from Jeff Morris. Jeff rides the trail and sends word to Lee to wait for him at the house. He should wait for him with his petticoat, with the name of Clint Dinkins, as the name of the outlaw and robber. The rest of the band was waiting.

CHAPTER V—Jeff shows the outlaw the power and asks his confidence, and Lee and Ruth decide to allow him to stay. Another road to the L. C. cattle country. Lee is up on the porch, and he is waiting for Frank to come to the room to see him. Frank is on the trail with the suspected riders.

The eyes of Norris were slits of shining light. This business tonight had got out of hand, and he had to watch his step. He had started out to kill one man, not three. Now there would be war to a finish with the L. C. outfit. Lee Chiswick would not rest until he had avenged the death of his son and the other two riders.

"Thought I heard some shooting," Gray said guilelessly. "I was down at the barn. Presumably taking a turn in when things began to pop."

"I reckon some drunk was punctuating the scenery," Norris said, watching his words. "No, I was playing seven-up with some of the boys."

"Likely some lad was bedding down in the hay and lit it with his cigarette," Gray suggested.

"Might be that way. If so, hope he got out."

"Time this town had a fire department," the red-headed man mentioned. "If a fire started when the wind was blowing hard, the whole main street would go."

"So it would," Norris agreed indignantly. "But I got no chips in this town's real estate."

A vaquero known as Kansas stepped up to them.

"Fire's burnin' out," he said to Norris.

Gray read fear in the man's shifty eyes. He decided that Kansas had been one of those involved in the attack. Like Norris, he had been spalled at the swiftness with which three men had been wiped out so horribly. To shoot men was one thing; to burn them up another.

"Morg and I were just beginnin' nobody got caught in there," Gray told the cowboy.

The startled eyes of Kansas stalked at Norris. "Why would he be asked hoarsely. 'You don't figure that—that?'"

"We don't figure a thing," Norris answered, his cold gaze fixing Kansas.

"Crook-Nose here allowed that maybe someone sleepin' in the hay might have lit it with a cigarette."

"Gray is the name, if you're meanin' me," the red-headed man smiled gently.

"That's right," the young killer's words dripped malice. "Clint Gray, isn't it?"

"No, sir. Nor Jeff Dink. Jeff Gray would be right. I'm a little particular about my name, Mr. Norris."

The steady gaze warned the other that he was treading on dangerous ground.

"Call yourself Paddy Ryan or John L. Sullivan for all I care," Norris said, his laugh insolently offensive. "Well, the shot over his headin' back to the seven-up game. You comin' along, Kansas?"

Gray watched them go. "That's two of them," he thought. "Lou Howard is probably another."

He walked up the main street to the Golden Nugget and sat in at a poker game.

Sherm Howard slammed a big fist down on the table in front of him. "Never saw anything more crazy in my life. That's no way to get a man—lie in wait for him right here in town so Lee Chiswick will know some of us must have done it. Couldn't some of you have bushwhacked him out on his own range? On top of that, you bump off three men instead of one. Bad medicine, Morg. These aren't the old days. We got to be more careful what we do. And you're not satisfied with shooting. You've got to burn 'em to death, like you were a bunch of Apaches."

"Ride yore son Lou," Norris said sulkily. "He was in it deep as any of us."

"I'll ride you all. It was the most foolish thing I ever heard of. We'll never hear the end of it. Were you all drunk?" demanded Sherman Howard.

"Not drunk. We'd been drinking some," Norris explained respectfully. "But we ain't drunk. Three of them got caught. We laid for young Chiswick. The other two popped up out of nowhere. Nobody knows who they were. They got what was comin' to them for buttin' into a game where they weren't invited."

knoaked in the stable wall.

CHAPTER VII

Frank Chiswick swung from the saddle stiffly. "How's every little thing?" his brother Bob asked.

"All right with me."

"Anything doing at Tail Holt?"

"Plenty. Where's the old man?"

"In the house writing a letter."

Frank unsaddled and turned his horse into a pasture.

"Better come along and listen to my story," he said.

From a kitchen window Ruth saw her brothers and followed them into the office. She heard her father's booming voice.

"Lo, Frank," she said. "You haven't changed much. We still have the same old cat."

"You can't tell me I'm not having the same old brother," he told her with a grin.

"Had trouble, did you?" Lee inquired.

"Some. Maybe it was my own fault. I had a fight. I've been shot at several times. I was cornered in a hayfield when the stable was on fire. A fellow who calls himself Jeff Gray saved my life."

The family sat at him. This category of adventures struck them for a moment.

"Sit down, son, and tell it," his father suggested after he had found speech.

When Frank reached in his narrative the fight with Lou Howard, his sister cut in sharply.

"I told you to leave him alone—that it was my fault as much as his. He scolded. 'Now you've made more trouble.'"

"Sorry it came out that way," Frank said, in penitent justification.

"He was bragging around how he had won the fight with Lou Howard, his sister cut in sharply.

a moment on Gray. "Maybe I'm the one who is to fall into the trap and this talk of smugglers don't mean a thing—Ride as loose as you can, boys. No too close together. If they fire at us we'll hunt cover, man for himself. There will be plenty of boulders there, or any way brush."

"Wouldn't it be better for one of us to crawl forward on foot and have a look-see?" Brand suggested. Before the echo died away a fusillade followed.

From round a bend in the gulch there came a snarl and a shout. "We're two late!" Chiswick cried. "Come on, boys."

He slid from the saddle and ran toward the bend, moving with the swiftness that comes from middle age. Gray passed him before he was halfway to the turn.

The scene Gray looked upon as he rounded the curve was one of the wildest confusion. Frightened by the firing, two saddled horses were bucking wildly in the dry bed of the stream. The men who had been riding the lay on the ground, one of them face down and the other in a twisted heap. Two others in Mexican costume were racing down the canyon to escape, while three masked men shot at them with rifles as they ran. Another masked man was struggling with a pitching mule.

Gray flung a bullet at the nearest of the marksmen. The man whirled, caught sight of him, and ripped out a startled oath. He gave a cry of warning, fired once wildly toward the men pouring round the bend, and turned to run. He caught the bride of one of the plunging horses and tried to mount. His foot could not find the stirrup nor could he fling himself aside the back of the animal. A bullet struck the pommel of the saddle to which he was clinging. With a yell of terror he went on and flew down the gorge, dodging in and out of the rocks as he went. Though the face of the man was covered by a bandanna except for the eyes, Gray recognized him as young Howard.

Taken by surprise, the other bandits thought only of flight. One ran limping to a horse, pulled himself to the saddle, and galloped off. Another plunged into the ground, as if he had stumbled, but did not rise again. The remaining two, panned in the rocks, answered the fire of the attackers.

"Get 'em, boys," Lee ordered. "We'll drive them into the open. Don't take any chances."

A saddled horse, snorting with fear, came out from the big boulders close to the spot where the two masked men crouched. The nearest outlaw seized the horse and mounted. His companion clambered on the animal and the animal dashed down the canyon.

"Bring up the horses," Lee called to his son Frank. "We'll take these fellows."

He moved forward to check the casualties. Two Mexicans were dead, as was also one of the outlaws. None of the Chiswick party.

Other likelihood flashed upon Gray. Occasionally smugglers from Sonora brought silver to Tough Nut to buy goods for consumption in Mexico, thus escaping the Mexican export duty on silver and the import duty on merchandise. In such illicit trading there was a fat profit. Between El Paso and Nogales there was no port of entry. The only custom-house was a shack down the San Pedro river at the point where it runs into the United States. One of the routes followed by smugglers wound through Live Oak canyon. From it the desert to Tough Nut was by an easy grade.

The longer he thought of it the more convinced he was that the raid was against smugglers. A pack horse had accompanied the Norris party, probably to carry back the silver. Moreover, the personnel of the group pointed to a smelter-house where cattle—stealing. Neither young Howard nor Kansas were top hands with cows. Why bring them along and leave an expert like Curly at home?

From chance remarks Gray had gathered that Curly was the leader of the rustler group. But Curly was no wanton killer.

Gray did not ride straight for the canyon, but took the road that led to the L. C. ranch-house. The Chiswicks could know much better than he what to do, since they were famillar with the terrain. If he played a lone hand he might miss the smugglers and let them ride on to destruction.

It was in the small hours when he reached the ranch. At his approach to the house a dog barked furiously. Presently someone opened the front door and came out on the porch.

A voice demanded, "Who's there?"

"Tell Lee Chiswick that Jeff Gray wants to see him," the night visitor answered, at the same time swinging from the saddle on the far side of the horse.

Gray told him why he was there. "What you want with him?" Bob Chiswick asked.

"I'll tell him that when I see him," Gray said dryly. "You run along in and tell him I'm here."

A head was thrust out of an upper window. "Who is it, Bob?"

"Says he is Jeff Gray, Father. Bob called up."

"Wait a minute." The head was withdrawn.

Five minutes later Lee Chiswick stepped out on the porch.

Gray told him why he was there. "To his son Lee said, 'Light a lamp in my office, Bob.' To Gray, 'The your horse and come in.'"

Ruth broke into the talk. "I don't believe it. I don't think Mr. Gray is a train robber or a rustler, Father. And I know he isn't one of Sherman Howard's men. Look what he did for Frank."

Her father turned in his chair. "Might have known you'd be butting in," he scolded, "seeing it's none of your business."

"I heard voices," she explained, "and I came down to see who it was."

"Now you know, you can go back to bed," Lee told her curtly.

"Not just yet, Father," Gray pleaded. "I'm gaunt as a pilled steer after a long drive. Since you're so sure I'm innocent, Miss Chiswick, how about a cup of coffee and some ham and eggs? I'll have just time for them before we start if you move lively."

"Start where?" she asked.

The red-headed man waved a hand deprecatingly at his host. "Ask Mr. Chiswick. I wouldn't know where."

Lee said: "Go ahead, girl. Fix him up some food." He added to his son: "Rout Frank and Dan Brand and Buck Conrad out of their beds. See they get horses saddled."

"You are innocent, aren't you?" "I never blacked a brand or ran one over. I never bought or sold a horse."

"Did you hear me tell you to rustle some grub, Ruth?" her father asked harshly. "Better fix breakfast for all of us. No telling when we'll eat again."

Ruth vanished. Presently they could hear the rattling of stove-lids and the crackling of wood.

"I don't know how to take you," Lee complained. "You certainly came through for Frank when he needed a friend. You claim you're not one of Howard's thieves, but you were with them when they ran that bunch of L. C. stuff up Box canyon. Pat Sorley checked up on your horse's hoofs."

"He didn't check up well enough. I went up the gulch after the thieves, not with them. They passed close to the line-camp in the night. I heard them and went out to see who they were. Pat hadn't been telling well the night before, so I didn't ride the horse, but followed the rustlers alone."

"You're a detective for the Cattlemen's association. That what you mean?"

"You can do yore own guessing. Right now I'm giving no information."

Insects Injuring Tobacco Plant Beds

Farmers are reporting severe insect injury in tobacco plant beds, according to H. R. Forkner, County agent. A number of control measures are recommended. Those measures that have given best results are as follows:

First—A tight boxed and canvassed bed gave best control.

Second—The following insecticides gave good results in the control of flea beetle injury: (a) Barium Fluosulfate dust 80% strength applied at the rate of 1/2 pound to 100 square yards of bed gave most effective control. (b) Bordeaux mixture (liquid spray) 3-5-50 strength with 1/2 pounds of arsenate of lead to each 50 gallons of solution gave good results. The effectiveness of this solution was increased when one pint of 40 percent nicotine sulphate was added to the 50 gallon solution.

Paris green, 1 part; lead arsenate 4 parts; and hydrated lime 1 part—when used as a dust gave fair results.

The Bordeaux mixture sprayed over the beds is particularly important this year in that it is also an effective treatment for the control of Blue Mold.

Circulars on plant bed management are available at the county agent's office.

Island Queen Dance Excursion

At Madison, Ind.,
Sunday, May 8th

A "Moonlight Dance Excursion" aboard the steamer Island Queen, will be staged at Madison, Ind., on Sunday night, May 8th, under the auspices of the Madison Lodge of Elks.

Plans for the boisterous and dance for those who want to sit and watch "the rest of the world go by." On the other hand, there will be an opportunity for cards for bridge devotees; or for a cheerful tete-a-tete with friends over a sandwich and refreshing drink in the Palm Garden on the main deck.

Clyde Trask and His Orchestra will provide the dance music on the beautiful ballroom deck, the most spacious ballroom on any ship afloat. Dancing is free. Betty Trolan, vocalist; Johnny May, drummer; extraordinary and xylophonists; Bobby Guyer, "hot trumpet" and hill-billy specialist; and Bud Ruskin, bass, are featured soloists.

The Island Queen is reputed to be the largest and finest inland water steamer in the world. It is of all-steel construction, with glass-enclosed decks, assuring safety and comfort. Its 36 water-tight compartments add to its quality of safety. Dirt, smoke and soot are eliminated through the use of oil for fuel.

Three separate electric plants provide power for operation, and service the 7,000 lights throbbing the ship which add to the thrilling spectacle as this floating palace glides gracefully across the waters at night.

The ballroom deck approximates 200 square feet of hardwood floor, cushioned on a specially designed air chamber, which makes dancing on the Island Queen perfect and un-tiring.

This fare will be 55 cents, if tickets are bought in advance, or 75 cents on the night of the boatride. Advance tickets are now on sale at Young's Cossidy's, The Oaks, Ingalls, at Madison.

Extercamp, a man who has made extended study and research in both material and method and is a leading authority in an advisory capacity.

When a committee of public officials announces that a contract for street paving construction has been let to John G. Extercamp, there is evidenced general satisfaction on the part of the public.

Many of their contracts executed in the past years are giving complete and lasting service today and it is not to be wondered at that their services are so much in demand.

It is fitting and proper that we make special mention of this concern and we wish to join you in appreciation of an important part the paving concern occupies in the progress of any community and in advising our officials to give John G. Extercamp due consideration in all contracts.

When a committee of public officials announces that a contract for street paving construction has been let to John G. Extercamp, there is evidenced general satisfaction on the part of the public.

Many of their contracts executed in the past years are giving complete and lasting service today and it is not to be wondered at that their services are so much in demand.

It is fitting and proper that we make special mention of this concern and we wish to join you in appreciation of an important part the paving concern occupies in the progress of any community and in advising our officials to give John G. Extercamp due consideration in all contracts.

Today In Kentucky

(Henry Ward)

(NOTE: The following article written by Henry Ward, newspaperman and member of the House of the Kentucky General Assembly since 1934, is based on actual figures obtained from reports of the State Treasurer, Auditor, Department of Revenue and Department of Finance. It paints a factual picture of the condition of the State general fund debt since the beginning of the present state administration.)

Frankfort, Ky., April 25.—One of the most controversial issues which has arisen in Kentucky in recent months is the question of how much the state debt has been decreased since Governor A. B. Chandler took office in December 1935. Equally interesting is the question of how the present state administration has managed to reduce the debt.

Conflicting statements relative to the Kentucky indebtedness are being heard. In a pamphlet recently issued from Frankfort, there is the claim "He (Governor Chandler) has reduced the state from $28,500,000 to $10,000,000 in two years." There are denials of this assertion, although no one who is informed is insisting that the state debt has not been reduced.

As a matter of fact, state records reveal that the net general fund debt of Kentucky has been reduced on March 31 of this year by $7,100,221 under the figure at which it stood on December 31, 1935. On that date the report of the state treasurer showed that warrants outstanding against the general fund amounted to $21,266,683, and there was $4,066,994 in the general fund account in the treasury. Deducting the amount of the case in the general fund account from the gross total of warrants left a net state general fund deficit at that time of $17,299,689.

On March 31, 1938, State Treasurer J. E. Buckingham reported the outstanding warrants against the general fund amounted to $11,227,118 and that the sum of $1,027,670 was held in cash in the general fund account. On that day, then, the net state deficit amounted to $10,199,448. The difference between the $17,299,689 net general fund deficit on December 31, 1935, a few days after Governor Chandler took office, and the $10,199,448 net deficit on March 31, 1938, is the $7,100,221 figure given above as the amount by which the net state general fund debt has been reduced since Governor Chandler took office.

Some observers, in estimating the state debt at the time Chandler became the chief executive, succeeding Ruby Laffoon, have not taken into consideration the fact that there was $4,066,994 cash in the general fund. That factor must be considered, however, in order to arrive at a correct picture of the state debt, because of the fact that at the present time the amount of cash in the general fund has dropped to $1,027,670. Apparently this administration has followed a policy of keeping only a small balance in the general fund so that the gross amount of the outstanding warrants could be maintained at a level as low as possible. On February 28, 1938, the report of the treasurer revealed that there was only $65,732 in the general fund account.

Other observers also have placed the amount of the state debt when Governor Chandler took office at $25,084,643. This figure can be obtained from the report of Treasurer Buckingham issued July 1, 1937, in which he makes the statement: "When I assumed my duties as treasurer January 6, 1936, the total interest-bearing warrants outstanding amounted to $25,084,643, consisting of $21,406,827.35 general expenditures and $3,677,815.12 highway road warrants."

The highway road warrants should never be combined with the general fund warrants in fixing the state debt, because the road debt is self-liquidating and is paid out of funds which do not go into the general fund. The $3,677,815 in road warrants outstanding shortly after the time Governor Chandler took office were paid out of the road fund revenue, a savings being effected by the simple expediency of removing from the payroll almost all the employees of the highway department and stopping maintenance work on the highways during the winter of 1935-36.

The reports of the treasurer and the auditor do not reveal any figures to substantiate the claim, which has been made by J. Dan Talbot, state commissioner of finance, that Governor Chandler, after two months in office, was confronted with a $28,500,000 debt. The net state general fund debt did increase during the first several months he was in office, but not as much as Mr. Talbot indicated. The net general fund debt on June 30, 1936, was $614,014 greater than it had been six months before.

The conclusion to be reached from the figures of the state departments is that the state debt has been reduced approximately $7,000,000 since Governor Chandler took office. Equally as interesting as the controversy over the question of exactly how much the state debt has been reduced is the argument over how the state has managed to reduce it. Has the reduction been brought about by economical and efficient operation of the state government, or has it resulted from increased taxes?

The answer is: increased taxes. Treasurer Buckingham's report reveals that the total revenue of the state received for its general fund during the fiscal year from July 1, 1935 to June 30, 1936, amounted to $22,014,340. The first half of that year Governor Laffoon was in charge of the state government; the second half Governor Chandler took over the reins. The same report shows that the state general fund revenue climbed to the all-time high of $30,192,165 during the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1936, and ending June 30, 1937, increase of $8,177,825 over the 1935-36 fiscal year.

In a statement prepared by J. Dan Talbot as director of the state budget, which was presented to the legislature by Governor Chandler, it was reported that the total anticipated receipts for the general fund will amount to $29,142,400 for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1937, and ending June 30, 1938. Monthly reports from the department of finance have indicated that receipts have been running above the estimates. If only the estimated figure is reached, however, it will represent an increase of $7,128,060 over the general fund revenue for the 1935-36 fiscal year.

As a matter of fact, however, the state did not have the benefit of the entire $22,014,340 represented as general fund receipts for the 35-36 fiscal year. Of the total, the sum of $2,857,945 was distributed that year among the counties as their share of the $6,920,047 which was produced from the 1934 gross receipts (general sales) tax. That left a balance of only $19,157,340 in the general fund to be applied on the cost of operating the state government and paying off the state debt.

In light of that fact, it is revealed that the general fund revenue produced by Governor Chandler's tax program during the fiscal year 1936-37 amounted to $11,035,165 more than was available for operating the government and paying on the debt in 1935-36, and the estimated increase of revenue during the 1937-38 fiscal year shows the 35-36 year will amount to $9,985,400, if actual receipts merely reach the estimates. That will make a total of $21,020,565 in general fund revenue for the last two fiscal years in excess of the amount available for payment on the state debt and operating expenses of the government in 1935-36.

It is estimated by Governor Chandler and Mr. Talbot that the state's general fund debt will be reduced to $6,000,000 by June 30, 1938. If that figure is reached, it will represent a net reduction of the state debt of $11,919,683 during the 1936-37 and 1937-38 fiscal years, during which period the state had $21,020,565 more general fund revenue than it had during the 1935-36 year—which means that taxes produced $9,106,882 more than the amount applied on payment of the debt.

Farmers Solve Fence Post Problem

By Growing Black
Locusts On Eroded Areas

Many farmers in the Soil Conservation Service area near Walton, Ky., are solving their fence post problem with one phase of the erosion control program on their farms.

By planning quick growing black locust trees on eroded locations to control erosion, these cooperative farmers are developing a supply of strong, durable fence posts, according to Ward T. Darnell, Superintendent, Black locust posts have been known in several cases to last 50 to 75 years.

Experience shows that on good black locust trees will produce 150 or more fence posts per acre in 10 to 15 years. Mr. Darnell said. As a legume, it is a good soil builder as well as a soil conservation. It provides "escape cover and food for some forms of wildlife and nesting sites for song birds."

Farmers in the area, in co-operation with the Service have planted 44,510 black locust trees, including 10,000 planted this year. With these trees will turn waste areas into profitable land, Mr. Darnell said. As an indication of the rapid growth of these trees under favorable conditions, Mr. Darnell pointed out that some of the black locusts have reached a height of 25 feet planted in April 1935 on some farms and diameter of 3 inches.

The use of black locusts is just one example of how erosion control practices furnish valuable "products" to the farmer, he added. In this case, good durable fence posts, which are always needed on the farm, are obtained as the by-product of erosion control.

Christian Church To Celebrate 20th Anniversary, Sunday

The congregation of the First Christian church will observe the 20th anniversary of the Dedication of its present house of worship with appropriate services on Sunday.

The history of the church dates back to the year 1875. In that year the small group of Disciples who located in Walton called Rev. J. W. Besley to conduct a revival meeting. Another meeting followed in 1876, resulting in the organization of the Christian Church. Rev. Besley was called to be its first pastor. For a period of about three years services were held in the L. O. O. F. Hall and the school house. In 1879 the first church building was erected and dedicated on High Street. Services were held here until 1918 when the present building was dedicated on May 5th. Rev. E. C. Lacy, pastor of the church at that time, and Rev. C. W. Caudle of Indianapolis, Ind., conducted the dedicatory services.

Rev. Lacy, now at Henderson, Ky., has been invited and is expected to attend the Anniversary Celebration on Sunday. A basket dinner will be served in the basement of the church, immediately following the morning worship. A special program is being planned for the afternoon. There will be no evening service. A special feature of the celebration will be the distribution of the first issue of a quarterly church paper giving the history of the church and its organizations.

The public is cordially invited to attend these services.

Another Large Crowd Present At Merchants Drawing Saturday Afternoon

A crowd believed to be larger than that of the preceding week was on hand Saturday afternoon to participate in the cash drawing sponsored by the Walton merchants.

The lucky ones were W. R. Powers, W. D. Johnson, Miss Thelma Peebles, Mrs. Wm. Ryle, Mrs. Allen Powers, Ernest Hartman and H. Holcomb.

There will be another drawing this coming Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock, and will be held on North Main Street, between the stores of D. L. Lusby and Mrs. Cluser.

See the merchants ad in this issue for a list of the cooperating business houses. Be sure and attend the drawing, because if you're not present, you get no cash. The winners of several names drawn the past two weeks, were not on hand, and were they the losers. Don't let this happen to you.

THIS and THAT

By MAOL-CHOLM

Congratulations, Mr. and Mrs. John Hartman! "Stag" we wish you and your bride a long life of happiness and prosperity.

The Kiddie Revue was a most successful affair. The James Theatre is a magnificent place to stage such a show, and it was filled almost to capacity. The only criticism we might offer would be that it was a bit too long. At least for some of the more nervous type—but it was a well-entertained. We really did it. It looked like a big top affair, with the beautiful surroundings, the gorgeous costumes and the handsome lads and pretty lassies taking part.

We learned of a rather odd and interesting fact the other day. Mrs. W. B. Johnson, who passed away Saturday, was one of six children. Her husband was one of six children. She leaves six children and six grandchildren. Quite a group of six.

The restaurant in the Jemer Theatre is sporting a new neon sign. This nifty little piece is called the Snap Shop.

Did You Know?
That on May 1, 1898, Dewey was victorious at Manila?
That on May 6, 1898, the first successful airplane flight was made?
That on May 7, 1915, the Lusitania was torpedoed and sunk?

This column is being abbreviated this week, due to a lot of night work and we must leave in the office and time is precious.
